The Villa Favorita reopens

Thanks to the unflagging energy of Francesca von Habsburg, the only daughter of Baron Heinrich Thyssen-Bornemisza, her ancestral residence, the Villa Favorita near Lugano, opened as a museum this spring. After the removal of the family property with numerous old masters to the Villahermosa Palace in Madrid the intention was to sell the Villa Favorita, and this is what the Archduchess of Habsburg has now succeeded in preventing. In 1991 she set up the ARCH Foundation to help maintain the artistic heritage of the former east bloc. Shortly after, a first attempt to rescue war-threatened cultural artifacts on the spot led Francesca von Habsburg to visit Croatia.

The new permanent collection (open from April 2 – October 31) is devoted to American painting of the last 150 years, with classical modern west European and Russian art. These mark a return of about 150 Thyssen paintings never before shown which were not included in the Spanish loan, and they show the baron's eclectic taste as a collector. The Villa Favorita will also hold a series of innovative exhibitions and symposia, as well as containing a restoration workshop.

Recession

- In 1992 about 10,000 bankruptcies were declared, which is 30% more than the year before. Losses amounted to Sfr. 1.3 billion.
- Redundancies: Berne telecommunications firm ASCOM shed 40 jobs; machine tool manufacturer TORNOS-BECHLER in Moutier, Berne, 70; building machine company AMMANN ULRICH AG in Langenthal, Berne, 50; and Biberist Paper Manufacturers 60.
- Since 1990 registration of all categories of motor vehicles has been in decline. In 1992 341,900 vehicles were registered in Switzerland, which is 30,000, or 8.2% lower than in 1991. The drop in new utility vehicles was the most marked, at 30.3%. Motorbikes were least affected, with 30,700 new registrations in 1992, just 2.5% less than in the previous year.

Motorbikes hardly feel the recession: new registrations only 2.5% down.

Ever more jobless and ever fewer vacancies: looking for a job is so difficult that resignation and depression are rife. (Photos: Keystone)

Media

- The daily «Tages-Anzeiger» – which also has an airmail edition – has recently celebrated its centenary. The first number appeared on March 2, 1893, in the form of an information sheet of a type often found in Germany at the time, i.e. a non-party newspaper for everyman living mainly on advertisements. Today the TA is the second biggest daily in Switzerland, and in the course of time it has given its name to the biggest Swiss media group.
- Ringier, another big Swiss publishing house, has become the market leader in the Czech Republic with more than a dozen titles. The most read paper there is the mass circulation «Blesk» (Lightning), a carbon-copy of Zurich's «Blick». However, there are no plans to extend this throughout central Europe on the model of the economic newspaper, «Cash», the main problem being a lack of serviceable printing shops.

Books

Derib, JO, Foundation for Life, Geneva, 1991, 96 p., Sfr. 25.–.

«Every individual must change his behaviour... Respect is what we need... for life, for oneself and for others... In at least one respect that is the decisive point». This is one of the key texts in «JO», an AIDS educational comic strip recently published by the «Foundation for Life» in western Switzerland. This book has gone a long way towards breaking the silence and contributing to constructive dialogue on AIDS prevention. The foundation has also gone to remarkable lengths to make the comic strip available to as many young people as possible between 14 and 20 all over the world and free of charge.

Derib (Claude de Ribapierre), one of the original and best Swiss designers of comic books, tells in simple yet scientific language the story of school girl JO who contracts AIDS and finally dies. Not only is her own suffering described but also the reactions of her family and friends to the tragedy – which could one day come to them, as also to the reader.

Thanks to both public and private support together with sales revenues and a large-scale information campaign, JO has already been distributed to innumerable young people both in Switzerland and abroad. In pursuing this aim the Foundation for Life needs as many partners as possible. All donations are welcome.

The book is available in German, French, Italian, Romansh, English and Dutch and costs Sfr. 25.– (with a special price of Sfr. 8.– for schools, libraries, etc.) + postage and may be ordered from:
