like to point out is that, as far as I know (and I shall be grateful to be disabused if I am wrong), Switzerland is the first, and probably only, country in the world where voting right has been granted to women by a popular vote.

In all other countries, if I am not mistaken, this duty and responsibility (I, indeed, consider voting as much as one of the duties and responsibilities of the citizen as one of his rights) has been entrusted to women by the government or by a parliament elected by male voters whose majority may not have agreed with their elected representatives or government on this particular point but had no means of imposing their views on this specific matter in the absence of the possibility of a popular referendum.

Whatever one may think of voting right for women, we should be proud of being the first country in the world which applied an absolutely direct democratic procedure to decide on that important question. Together with the fact that the Swiss (male or female) voter participates directly to the political life of the country by voting several times a year on many subjects, and not only every third, fourth or fifth year to elect representatives, this fact might also be tactfully reminded in a friendly way to those of our foreign friends who display witty irony upon the fact that Swiss women were granted voting right "only" in 1971.

GREETINGS FROM U.S.A.

Fifteen years ago a couple and four children, all born in New Zealand, boarded a ship in Auckland for a three-week voyage. An adventure but it paid off. The family has grown to 16 with the grandchildren.

Best New Year's Greetings to the ones that remember us.

The Kominoths.

[This notice should have appeared in our December issue. We apologise for this delay.—Ed.]
