The independence of the Swiss Pays de Vaud was proclaimed in Lausanne on January 24th, 1798, when the régime of the Bernese bailiffs came to an end, but it was not until April 14th, 1803, that the new Canton of Vaud was constituted with the Small Council (the executive power), which later took the name of the State Council, and the 180-member Grand Council (legislative power).

This important date in the history of the region will be marked in Lausanne on April 14th, 1953, with celebrations that also co-incide with the swearing-in of the deputies to the Grand Council, who will be elected on March 1st for a four year term of office. The deputies will form a procession headed by the members of the Federal Council (the Swiss Cabinet) and members of the national Parliament. All other Swiss cantons will be represented by their magistrates preceded by cantonal officials.

The ceremony will be held in Lausanne's magnificent gothic cathedral, where the deputies will take their usual oath. In the afternoon there will be a procession consisting of young people from all parts of the canton. There will be special publications in honour of the occasion and, as in the Canton of St. Gall, a special coin will be struck. Different celebrations, the nature of which will depend on local conditions, will be held all over the canton on Sunday, April 12th.
