St. Gall, the charming metropolis of North-eastern Switzerland, well-known "centre of fashion amongst lakes and mountains" and, according to some experts, the city which harbours the largest number of pretty girls in Switzerland, is going to stage an especially spectacular show of elegance this autumn, from 9th to 13th September. Apart from its traditional International Horsemanship Meet, St. Gall will this year organize the Pre-Olympic Training Test, and the world's best in both "concours hippique" and "breaking-in" are expected to participate. As these two outstanding sports events coincide with the 200th anniversary of one of St. Gall's most important firms in the embroidery industry, especial stress will be laid on fashion shows and other arrangements attracting the gentle sex.

Berne, the capital of the Swiss Confederation and one of the best preserved medieval cities in Europe (population 160,000), is now again linked to the international air-traffic network by daily Swissair flights to and from Zurich Intercontinental Airport. A 4,000-foot concrete runway was recently inaugurated at the city's airport of Belpmoos after the condition of the original lawn runway some time ago had proved so unsatisfactory that Swissair had been compelled to cancel all flights to and from Berne. Belpmoos is considered here as just a "provisional stage"; plans for a new airport with possibilities for medium-range aircraft may be realized within a few years.

J. J. SCHNEIDER. †

We deeply regret to record the passing, on the 8th instant, of Mr. John James Schneider, at the age of 78 years. He died in hospital, where he had been, rather seriously ill, for the past seven weeks, but his end came quite peacefully and he breathed his last in the presence of his daughter, his only child.

Mr. Schneider, known to his intimates as 'Jack', was born at Bâle in March 1881, where he attended the local elementary and higher schools. On leaving, he entered an apprenticeship with a well-known firm of upholsterers and interior decorators.

Next, our friend emigrated to Frankfurt, to attend a school which specialised in training young interior decorators, where cutting, calculating and other matters were taught. He then entered employment in Berlin, when young Mr. Schneider was sent for several journeys on large Liners to the U.S.A., supervising and maintaining the installation of carpets, furnishings, etc.

In 1906 he arrived in London. For the first few years he was engaged with a car firm, in charge of the upholstery department. Later on, having married an English lady in 1913, he established himself in business on his own account and opened a factory for cane furniture and basketware. In the course of years, however, the fashion and demand for this type of furniture died out and Mr. Schneider was reluctantly compelled to liquidate his business.

In March 1930 the Swiss Mercantile Society held a special Meeting, at which Mr. Schneider was elected Secretary, a position which he took over on 1st April of that year and held with distinction until the end of 1952. He put his heart and soul into his work, and was of great assistance, not only to the Society, its Council and Committees, but also to the teaching staff and students. In the latter he took a particular and fatherly interest, and regularly conducted them on sightseeing tours through the London he loved and knew so well. During the war years, when the College had perforce to close its doors, Mr. Schneider was invited by his friend, the late Mr. P. F. Boehringer, to join the staff of the Frederick Printing Co. Ltd., where he soon acquainted himself with his new duties and did very good work, assisting also in the publication of the 'Swiss Observer'.

Mr. Schneider resumed his duties as Secretary of the S.M.S. Ltd. at 'Swiss House' as soon as its doors opened again after the war for the re-admission of students.

In 1952, whilst on his holidays at Stornoway in the Hebrides, our friend was stricken with a streptococcus infection in his legs and had to be flown back to London, where he was obliged to enter hospital immediately. This illness unfortunately hastened the day of his retirement, which, to everyone's regret — particularly his own — had to take place on 31st December 1952. Thus his successful Secretaryship came to an untimely close.

Mr. Schneider was also an ardent Freemason and held the rank of a Grand Officer in the Craft, the Royal Arch and Mark. He was one of the originators and founders of the Helvetica Lodge and its Secretary from the time of consecration to the day of his passing, which means during the long span of 32 years.

In all circles where Jack Schneider had been active, he will be very greatly missed, for he always gave of his best. Moreover, he had a great capacity for friendship and was essentially 'a man's man'. All his many friends will ever remember him with gratitude and affection.

The funeral took place on Thursday, 13th August, at Golders Green Crematorium, and was attended by many of his old friends. The service was conducted by the Rev. Miss Doris Voegelin, Vicarress of the Swiss Church in London, who, after reading the appropriate passages of Scripture, gave a beautiful, moving and uplifting address, in which she stressed the many gifts with which the dear departed had been blessed and which made his long life such a rich one. Mr. A. C. Stahelin, an old and close friend, also spoke in eloquent terms, bringing home to those who knew Jack Schneider well, how much he had given them in many different ways and how greatly he would be missed. Mr. Stahelin also mentioned Miss Schneider's exemplary devotion to duty and assured her and her mother of the real sympathy of all their friends.

To Mrs. Schneider, unfortunately in rather poor health, and to her dutiful and devoted daughter, we express our deepest sympathy in their bereavement. W.D.

THE FAILURE OF JURASSIAN SEPARATISM.

By PIERRE BÉGUIN.

An important Popular Referendum took place recently in the canton of Berne. The voters had been called upon to express their opinion on an Initiative, which had been launched by the so-called Jurassian Separatist Movement, which demanded that a plebiscite should be organised in the seven Jurassian districts, in the canton of Berne, in order to establish in a definite manner whether the Jurassians really wanted a scission with the canton of Berne and the constitution of a twenty-sixth canton, that of the Jura. The Initiative was rejected, not only by the whole of the Bernese electorate, but also by the Jurassians themselves.

This vote has helped towards gauging the extent of the Jurassian separatist movement.

In order to understand the importance of the vote which has taken place, it is necessary to know that the canton of Berne is composed of two principal parts: on the one hand there is the Ancient Canton, which speaks German and practises the reformed religion, whilst on the other hand there is the Bernese Jura, where the people speak French mostly and are Roman Catholics. The Bernese Jura was only attached to the canton of Berne in 1815, by virtue of the international treaties signed at that time. Before that it had belonged to the bishopric of Basle. For more than a century no difficulties arose between the two parties in the canton of Berne. Then, however, following upon various circumstances, the Jurassian minority manifested a separatist tendency. It was thus that the Separatist Party launched the Initiative on which the electors belonging to the two parties voted. At first glance this vote only appeared to touch upon a question of procedure, but in reality it concerned the very heart of the matter, as it was very evident that the adversaries of the plebiscite were opposed to any separation, whilst its partisans were in favour of the constitution of a Jurassian canton, and thus, of a scission with Berne.

It had already been foreseen that the Initiative launched by the Separatists would be rejected by the German-speaking party of the canton of Berne, but what proved very interesting were the results of the voting in the Bernese Jura, the French-speaking district in the canton of Berne. As we have already stated, the Initiative was rejected by the Jurassians themselves, by 16,000 as against 15,000 votes. Furthermore, it is indicative that the Separatists, who only obtained 15,000 votes, had had their Initiative supported by as many as 21,000 signatures. This means that hundreds of citizens, who, for reasons of prestige, for economic motives or for reasons connected with public opinion in their small towns, although they had not dared to refuse their signature publicly, had cast a "no" into the secrecy of the ballot-box. Finally, we learn that of the seven Jurassian districts, four rejected the Initiative.

The conclusion may therefore be drawn that separatism is not borne on the crest of a deep wave of opinion and that it has now, so to speak, "lost the rubber".

Nevertheless, the fact must not be overlooked that, in the Bernese Jura, the votes were pretty well equal, and that three districts voted definitely in favour of the separatist Initiative. Thus, a problem subsists. It could be solved, however, if the victors and the vanquished in this Referendum joust were to make an effort with a view to regaining the means whereby they can once more live together in harmony. As a matter of fact, up to now, it has always proved possible, in Switzerland, to find a solution for the problems of various minorities. It is up to the Jurassians and the Bernese, therefore, to show us that they also are capable of surmounting divisions and of living together in peace and amity. This is the sincere wish of their other Confederates.

delle Centovalli, che segnano nella vita delle Ferrovie Regionali Ticinesi l'inizio di una nuova era; una nuova era che sarà di progresso e di soddisfazioni per tutta la zona locarnese e per il turismo in generale. Pensiero che correva nella mente di tutti quando l'elegante e modernissima composizione dai colori bianco-celesti si apprestava a lasciare il piazzale Stazione FFS di Locarno, carica di fiori e di bandiere e di signori austeri, in rappresentanza delle Autorità civili e giudiziarie, dei rappresentanti della stampa, della Radio e della TV e di una folta schiera di invitati. Salutato dall'applauso di alcune scolaresche il treno si mosse leggero e senza scosse scivolando quasi sulle rotaie dirigendosi, fra lo sguardo incuriosito e interessato della gente, verso il lungolago e verso Intragna punto di congiungimento con l'altro treno "Ticino" che doveva condurre a Locarno gli invitati provenienti dall'Italia e dalla Svizzera romanda.

— Il Parco dei Bambini della città di Locarno troverà sede al limite del Bosco Isolino, tra la strada che vi s'inoltra partendo dalla via F. Ballerini ed il Minigolf, su uno spiazzo un po' sopraelevato e che serve già ora da rudimentale campo da gioco. Il progetto la cui realizzazione è preventivata in Fr. 28,000, comprende la formazione di un viale d'accesso, la sistemazione del terreno, una somma minima per il taglio di piccole piante, la costruzione di gabinetti, la posa di una fontana, di panchine, di vari attrezzi e di altri accessori.

OSSASCO — Martedì, 9 giugno, scoppiava un incendio che favorito da un forte vento prendeva consistenza e distruggeva completamente 2 case d'abitazione di proprietà dei sigg. Eredi fu Carlo Leonardi situate all'entrata sud del villaggio. L'Ufficio postale ed il Caseificio sociale che si trovano ubicati nelle case venivano completamente distrutti. Il pronto intervento dei Pompieri di Bedretto, Airolo e Quinto, rinforzati dai militi della Comp. Gran. Fort. 18 agli ordini del magg. Ludwig non poterono domare la furia dell'elemento scatenato. Le fiamme hanno pure distrutto 2 cascine di proprietà del sig. Giovanni Orelli che si trovavano a circa 100 metri lontane dal sinistro. Da un primo bilancio i danni si manifestano ingentissimi: si calcolano in decine di migliaia di franchi.

To these must be added some 15,000 motor vehicles belonging to the army, and 41,000 agricultural tractors. There are still some 117,000 horses with their vehicles which pass along Switzerland's roads. There are also about 1.8 million cyclists in Switzerland. Approximately 50,000 persons are employed in the motor-car industry.
