Rejection of a proposal to ban atomic weapons in Switzerland is recommended by the Federal Council. The proposal was put forward in the form of an initiative, signed by 72,793 people, by the Swiss movement against atomic rearmament. It suggested insertion in the Constitution of an Article prohibiting the manufacture, import, transit, storage and use of atomic weapons of any kind on Swiss territory.

A reward of 5,000 francs is being offered for information leading to the recovery of 50,000 francs in notes which disappeared from the Postal Customs Department at Basle. The money was being sent through the post by a large bank. The parcel was handed in at a Basle post office in the evening. Next morning it went to the customs office, where it was registered. Later in the day, when it should have been dispatched by airmail, the parcel was missing.

At Marthalen, in the canton of Zurich, archaeological experts have uncovered a Celtic settlement which reportedly dates from the fifth century B.C. This village, which survived for more than 500 years, was well advanced in the use of metals, as witness the objects found at the site.

Recently published statistics indicate that there are only three people out of work in the whole city of Lausanne — two men and a woman.

Fully-equipped mountaineers from Zurich made an unusual and rather tricky ascent last week by moonlight — in the middle of the city. They marked their ascent by placing an upturned wine bottle on the summit, the spire of the Federal Technical. It is there that the mountaineers — two mathematicians — study during the day. Their descent was uneventful — until University proctors presented them with a bill for disturbing the peace.

LETTER FROM GENEVA

A very surprised man is sitting in Geneva's St. Antoine jail on a four-year-old murder charge: Rudolf Arndt, of West Berlin.

The Swiss authorities requested the German police way back in 1960 to arrest Arndt on suspicion of the murder in Geneva of an arms dealer named Marcel Léopold.

The German police refused to make an arrest. At the time of the murder, 19th September 1957, they said Arndt's passport showed he was in Berlin. Therefore, he was innocent.

There was nothing more the Swiss authorities could do. Then Arndt slipped badly. He travelled on business across the border to Holland. There the Dutch police, alerted by Geneva, pounced.

Pending extradition procedures, Arndt went on a hunger strike. He was nevertheless sent under strong guard to Geneva last week-end. Now he is being questioned by Judge William Dunand, the magistrate in charge of the case.

The Marcel Léopold murder has been given Dunand a bad headache for a long time. The middle-aged Swiss arms dealer was killed within seconds between leaving the lift in front of his third floor flat at the Cours de Rive, and pressing the bell. He fell dying into the arms of his White-Russian wife.

The crime weapon was a hand-made metal tube that could be concealed in a sleeve, capable of ejecting a dart and killing with no more sound than a sigh.

A partner of Léopold's, Georg Puchert, was later killed in Germany. In this case a queer hand-made bomb was fitted under the victim's car, triggered to go off when the starter was pressed.

"I have no statement to make yet. The questioning of the accused is far from over," said Judge Dunand.
