THREE VERY DIFFERENT 50th ANNIVERSARIES

An exhibition on three floors at the Zurich Stadthaus marked the Golden Jubilee of the Swiss National Tourist Office, the "Schweizerische Verkehrszentrale". In 1917, a national federation for the promotion of travel communications was founded, which opened its office in Zurich soon afterwards. The SNTTO has always known how to combine publicity with art, and the poster exhibition documented this to the full. In 1967 alone, nearly a quarter of a million posters were sent to agencies, travel offices and airlines, in addition to between 14 and 15 million brochures and prospectuses. Between 1960 and 1967, twenty new colour films were made. Their quality may be judged from the fact that 23 were awarded prizes at international festivals and competitions.

At the end of November, Switzerland's best known orchestra, the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, celebrated its Golden Jubilee at the same time as its founder and chief conductor, Ernest Ansermet, celebrated his 85th birthday. A concert to mark the double event took place in Geneva, at which the master himself and his successor, Polish-born Paul Klecki, conducted.

A commemoration ceremony took place in Olten of the General Strike which had begun in Switzerland in the bleak November days of 1918. The event was organised by the Swiss Trade Union Federation, and the President of the Confederation, Federal Councillor Spuehler, Federal Councillor Tschudi and the President of the National Council Dr. H. Conzett were amongst the many guests of honour. The strike had begun as a local stoppage in Zurich, but it turned into a national one when negotiations with the Federal Council had broken down. Some of the speakers underlined the fact that the Government had not kept up with events during the first world war and had not been alive to the difficulties the end of the war brought. All the "Olten Committee" at the time wanted, was to re-introduce the citizen's liberties and rights and the realisation of urgent economic and social proposals. The strike, the former President Leuenberger said, had been the introduction to "political clarification". In the second war, the social conscience had been awakened, and the Government was ready for the post-war years.

In Zurich, too, a commemoration ceremony took place, and the tragic events preceding the general strike were remembered, when Swiss soldiers were used to bring order into the chaos on the Muensterhof in Zurich.

Naturally, the strike of 1918 is judged from different angles, and the views of the Left is not necessarily shared by all. But it cannot be denied that the general strike took Switzerland to the brink of civil war.

The "Schweizer Monatshefte" issued a special number in which, for the first time, documents were published from the archives of the Wille, von Sprecher and Sonderegger families. Of special interest is a letter in which General Wille implores the Federal Council that to prevent was better than to cure and asks for energetic measures. The publication contains extracts from the diary of the Chief of the General Staff von Sprecher, dealing with the dramatic scenes in Olten where he had personally asked for an end to the strike. For the first time, too, the report is published in which Divisional Commander Sonderegger (Platzkommandant of Zurich) describes the crucial events in Zurich and the use of troops.
