Manila

The First Lady of the Philippines

and the Embroideries of Forster Willi & Co., St. Gall

The name is Imelda Marcos, the First Lady of the Philippines - an image so richly endowed with assurance, simplicity and regality that employing superlatives about her becomes second nature to the millions who love and admire her. Mrs. Imelda Marcos has captured the Filipino's public imagination. This is because of the fact that Filipinos have a preference or perhaps nostalgia for the uncomplicated world her person evokes, of sunshine, honor and domestic felicity.

Since her reign as the First Lady of the Philippines, Mrs. Imelda Marcos has had a long line of accomplishment behind her. People say that she is one of the few who are gifted with that rare talent of turning and planning out complex things with a symphonic touch that makes everything come out precise, harmonious, successful. She is full of optimism and brims over fresh ideas for promoting tourism, beautifying the city, encouraging arts, patronizing cottage industries. One of her major accomplishments was the fund drive she herself launched for the building of what was to be the first cultural centre in Manila. Within a short period of twenty days, Mrs. Imelda Marcos was able to raise twenty million pesos, an accomplishment that is hard to top.

Her hard role as the First Lady does not, however, alter with her role as a wife. She is a true man's woman for her life definitely revolves around her man. And it is extremely difficult to conceive of Mrs. Imelda Marcos in isolation from President Ferdinand Marco. As she herself puts it, "We are sort of a package deal".

Mrs. Imelda Marcos is also a devoted, thoughtful mother to three precious children (two lovely girls, Imee and Irene and a handsome boy named Bongbong). In spite of her tight schedule, she still manages to find time to supervise the children in their homework and also play.

Without trying to be one, Mrs. Imelda Marcos is now a fashion setter in Manila. Fashion-conscious females are copying her style of dressing. A very traditional sort of person and possessing the characteristics considered "de rigueur" at the turn of the century, Mrs. Imelda Marcos will surely make a mark in history as one of the most stately first ladies. As one columnist aptly put it, "it is very difficult not to 'queennify' her".
