The Reverend John Cyril Edmondson was born in 1920, the son of a member of Parliament. He was educated at Eton and served with distinction in the Royal Navy during and after the Second World War. He won the Distinguished Service Cross. He is also an acknowledged and self-confessed friend of Switzerland.

Who is he? To many of his friends in the Swiss community and indeed in Britain he is probably better known as the Reverend Lord Sandford, Second Baron of Banbury.

For the past two years Lord Sandford has been President of the Anglo-Swiss Society, a post he fulfils with vigour and pleasure. He has a long and well-established rapport with Switzerland. Along with the Society's past President, Lord Selkirk, he has enjoyed many a season ski-ing in the Swiss Alps. Indeed, he has done so regularly, except for the war years, since the tender age of five. He is especially proud of the fact that he was one of the first Britons to return to the ski slopes near Davos immediately after the war.

But ski-ing in Switzerland is not Lord Sandford's only connection with our country. Far from it. As a parliamentarian he has played a very active role in the Anglo-Swiss Parliamentary Group.

But Lord Sandford has also enjoyed a varied and chequered career. He was, first and foremost, a sailor. He retired from the Royal Navy, with the rank of Commander, in 1956 – primarily because he felt a strong call to the Church. He was ordained a minister of the Church of England two years later and enjoyed the life of a humble country parson while he served as curate at St. Nicholas' church in Harpenden, Herts for a period of five years.

It was during his incumbency there that the Reverend John Cyril Edmondson succeeded to his title after the death of his father in 1959. So how did he feel about being a Lord whilst serving as a curate. "No problem" he says, "my flock treated me just as they would any other parson. I had succeeded in shaking off the mantle of my senior Naval rank and had settled into my new life very happily". He also married a parson's daughter, Catherine Mary Hunt, and is blessed with two sons and two daughters.

From 1965 to 1968 he served as executive chaplain to the Bishop of St. Albans but then the call to politics came to him. His political career was also a success story. He was Conservative Whip in the House of Lords from 1966 to 1968 and Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Housing and Local Government during Mr. Edward Heath's administration. He has also served as Chairman of the Hertfordshire and Westminster Councils of Social Services. He was also a member of the Church Army Board for a year.

So why did this sensitive man, blessed with a social conscience as he undoubtedly is – a man with many advantages in life, decide to enter the political arena? Probably for the same reason that he relinquished a distinguished career in the Navy to become a parson. Because he felt he had to.

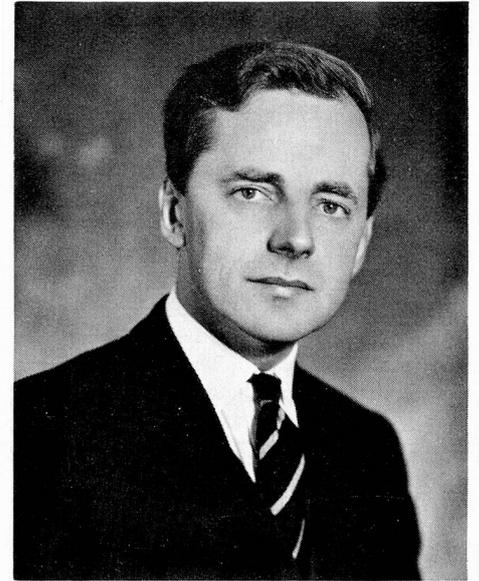

In his own words "given that we have a political system in which a limited number of privileged people are given a seat in the House of Lords, I felt it my duty to accept the responsibilities that come with the privileges".

But in conclusion let us return for a moment to Lord Sandford's ski-ing prowess. He is proud to report that he actually won a race against a team of Swiss Parliamentarians. But, he adds wistfully, that was before the Swiss Parliament managed to find its current "champions". One surprising snippet of information on the subject was that for up to 10 years after the war there were more experienced skiers in the British Parliament than there were in the Swiss. "This has changed now" adds His Lordship.

In spite of his busy life in the House of Lords, Lord Sandford is still a parson at heart. Whenever he can he likes to preach or conduct the occasional wedding or christening.

In thanking Lord Sandford for giving us this interview, and for the interesting tour of the House of Lords and his hospitality there, let us hope that the British and Swiss communities will continue to benefit from his friendship for many more years to come. WGS
