The Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā: A translation and study of the Tibetan version of the six-syllables spell

DOI 10.1515/asia-2016-0054

Abstract: This article examines the Tibetan version of the $\S a dak \$ ara - vidy \bar{a}$, an apotropaic text extracted from the $\S a r d\bar{u} lak ar n\bar{u} vad \bar{a} na$, and discusses its position in early Buddhist rak \$ a literature as well as the effects of its mantra, which was employed for healing purposes. The diseases, sores, and different kinds of fever against which the mantra shall be efficacious are given in a long list, which became a common feature throughout Buddhist protective texts. It is the sound substance of the mantra, which brings about the desired effect only when recited correctly. Thus the precise wording of the spell is essential, and this article therefore offers next to a full translation of the Tibetan $s\bar{u}tra$ also an edition of the mantras.

Keywords: rakṣā literature, Tibetan sūtra, mantra, spell, healing

With the discovery of numerous manuscripts in Indian languages among the finds from Gilgit, Bajaur, Turfan and other places in Central Asia we are now in the position to present more and more texts, which can be ascribed to the genre of the $rak s\bar{a}$ literature¹ and which, until then, were only preserved in Tibetan or Chinese translations. $Rak s\bar{a}$ ("protection") texts function mainly to provide protection, to ward off malignant beings, dangerous animals and all sort of calamities, and to heal illnesses through magical spells, in the beginning in form of moral sayings, which were later supplemented by mantras. The Indian original texts finally allow us to shed some light on the beginnings and the evolution of spell practice in early Indian Buddhism. While the protective texts of the Theravādins do not contain any mantras, it seems that the redaction of their canon already came to an end when the use of mantras gained further influence by the first two centuries of the Common Era,² the spell practice was fully accepted by the Mūlasarvāstivādins and a considerbale number of their rakṣā texts were translated into Tibetan. Bu ston Rin chen grub (1290–1364) cites in his chronicle of Indo-Tibetan Buddhism Chos 'byung "Origin of the Dharma" a royal edict, which says that "(works) other than Mūlasarvāstivāda as well as mantras were not to be translated."³

Skilling gives a first list of seven Mūlasarvāstivādin texts containing protective *mantra*s, both in the Sanskrit original language and in Tibetan and Chinese translations,⁴ whereas more text can certainly be found. Among that list we find the Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā ("The six-syllables spell") of the Śārdūla-karṇāvadāna, which is included as an individual sūtra in the Tibetan Kangyur. Before I describe the position of this spell in early Buddhist rakṣā literature and its effects, the rather short length of this text allows me to give a brief textual study, comprising a full translation and an edition of the two mantras, which the sūtra calls rig sngags kyi rgyal mo (Skt. vidyārājñī "spell-queen").

1 The Şadakşara-vidyā

In his Tantra Catalogue Bu ston classes the Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā (BU 203⁵) together with other Mūlasarvāstivādin rakṣā texts, such as the Mahāsūtras Mahāsamāja, and Āṭānāṭīya,⁶ and the Bhadrakarātrī-sūtra under Kriyā Tantra within the section rigs so so'i rgyud, and in the family de bzhin gshegs pa (Tathāgatha family). Among this family he places it in the subsection gnas gtsang ma'i lha la sogs pa'i rgyud (the tantras of the Śuddhāvāsa gods, etc.). The Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā is included twice in all the different editions of the Tibetan Kangyur of the Tshal pa group (B681, B916, C318, C547, D575, J631, J834, D917, Q313, Q542, U576, U919), and once in the editions of the Them spangs ma group (L426, S534, T529, V602, Z547). In the so-called mixed group we can find it twice in dpe bsdur ma Kangyur (A693, A1023), but only once in both the Narthang (N573) and Lhasa (H602) edition. The differences in the transmission of the different groups of the Kangyur are further reflected by the variations they show in the title and the wording of the mantras of the respective sūtra. The Tshal pa group and the dpe bsdur ma Kangyur have as Sanskrit title ārya-ṣaḍakṣara-bidyā, and as Tibetan title 'phags pa yi ge drug pa'i rig sngags. While the Them spangs ma group, and the mixed group give slightly different Sanskrit titles, namely ārya-ṣaṭākṣara-bidyā, and ārya-ṣaṭakṣara-bidyā, they share the wording of the Tibetan title'phags pa yi ge drug pa zhes bya ba'i rig sngags. The translators' colophon is only mentioned in Lalou's inventory of Tibetan manuscripts from Dunhuang (I § 51.2), which runs: "traduit & corrigé par Jinamitra, Danaśīla et Ye-çes-sde, noms qui manquent à Ōtani 313 et à Mdo-man 50"8

² The earliest evidence for the use of mantras is represented by the Gāndhārī manuscript of the Manasvi-nāgarāja-sūtra, which can be dated to the first two centuries of the Common Era. Cf. Strauch 2014: 67, 68.

In the text the Buddha teaches Ānanda the so-called six-syllables spell, through which any kind of disease can be warded off. The structure of the sūtra can be summarized as follows:

If one holds and maintains it, peace and auspiciousness will occur. Punishment, and weapons will be abandoned, poisons eliminated, and destroyed with water. Having tied it with a thread, Ānanda, I do not see anyone in the world of gods, Māra, and Brahma, of human beings including śramaṇas, and brāhmaṇas, and of gods, humans, and asuras, whose head will not split into seven pieces like the branches of the arjaka tree, if one transgresses.

- [4.] When the Blessed one had said this the venerable Ānanda, and the world with its gods, humans, asuras, and gandharvas rejoiced and praised what the Blessed One had said.

The noble six-syllables spell is finished.

3 Edition of the mantras

*Mantra*s build the main core of protective texts and are credited with apotropaic powers to overcome calamities, dangers and other evils. Next to other supporting means of efficiency, such as the concept of $saccakiriy\bar{a}$, 10 $maitr\bar{\imath}$, 11 and invocations of protectors and deities, 12 $raks\bar{a}$ texts become effective through the mere recitation of their mantras. It is the sound substance of the mantra, which brings about the desired effect only when pronounced correctly. A very common feature of the $raks\bar{a}$ literature then became the so-called list of great poisons, and the list of calamities. By knowing the names of poisons, diseases, dangerous beings, and animals, one gains control and power over them and their negative impact is subdued.

⁹ It is said that when a branch of this tree falls to the ground, it bursts into seven parts. This metaphor is widely used in dhāraṇī scriptures as warning to those who do not act in accordance with the spell's injunction. Davidson (2014: 31) states: "Dhāraṇī texts generally asserted the consequence of transgression to be the head bursting into seven parts, like the pod or blossom of the arjaka (a species of basil, perhaps ocimum grassimum or ocimum album closely related to the tulasi and well known in medical literature)."

In the wording of the two mantras, which the Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā calls vidyā, we can make out three gently variant readings following the Tshal pa, and the Them spangs ma lineage, and the mixed group. These differences mostly concern the rendering of the Sanskrit phonemes in the Tibetan script. That is exactly the reason why the main text of the mantras is here given in Tibetan script, which enables one to better trace minor orthographical variants.

4 Position in early rakṣā literature

The narrative frame and one of the two mantras found in the Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā, is extracted from the Śardūlakarṇāvadāna. Remarkable is the fact that the wording of the spell entitled ṣaḍakṣarī-vidyā differs entirely in both versions. The beginning of the Sanskrit mantra, however, appears then in the second vidyā of the Tibetan text. The introductory narrative of the Śārdūlakarṇāvadana, story 33 in the Divyāvadāna collection, was translated into Chinese in 230 CE under the name Mātaṅgī-sūtra.²⁰

This part, which begins with the following narration, is completely missing in the Tibetan text:

Overpowered by a magical spell cast of a <code>candala</code> woman whose daughter Prakṛti had fallen in love with him, Ānanda enters their house. In awareness of the danger that awaits him, he invokes the Buddha who is able to rescue him by a magical counterspell. Buddha's spells are more powerful than the spells of other sorcerers and annihilate them. In this way Ānanda gets away from the two women. The <code>mantra</code> recited by the Buddha to release Ānanda from the witch's spell consists entirely of natural language. The text of the Śārdūlakarṇāvadāna runs as follows:

atha bhagavān āyuṣmantam ānandaṃ samanvāharati sma samanvāhṛtya saṃbuddha-mantraiś caṇḍālamantrān pratihanti sma | tatreyaṃ vidyā |

sthitir acyutiḥ sunītiḥ | svasti sarvaprāṇibhyaḥ |

saraḥ prasannaṃ nirdoṣaṃ praśāntaṃ sarvato 'bhayaṃ |

ītayo yatra śāmyanti bhayāni calitāni ca |

tad vai devā namasyanti sarvasiddhāś ca yoginaḥ |

etena satyavākyena svasty ānandāya bhikshave ||

(Mukhopadhyaya 1954: 3–4)

The Blessed One then focused his attention on the venerable Ānanda, having turned his attention [on him] he stroke back the mantras of the Caṇḍāla women with the mantras of the Buddha. This is the spell then:

Standing firm, imperishable, free from distress, well-being for all sentient beings. Water, clear, faultless, calm, and entirely fearless, Where plagues, fears, and disordered senses are extinguished. To that indeed, all gods, siddhas, and yogins pay homage. By this asseveration of truth, [may there be] well-being for Ānanda, o monks.

²⁰ In the appendix of their edition of the Divyāvadāna, Cowell and Neil briefly describe the four Chinese translations of the Śārdūlakarṇāvadana (Taishō 551, 552, 1300, 1301), among them the Mātaṅgī-sūtra, which belongs to the earliest Buddhist scriptures containing mantras. Cf. Cowell/Neil 1970: 657.

This passage is followed by the injunction to \bar{A} nanda to take up, hold, speak, and master the so-called six-syllables spell. This is the first parallel to the Tibetan \bar{S} adakṣara-vidyā [1., 2.]. The Sanskrit text reads:

udgṛhna tvam ānanda imāṃ ṣaḍaksharīvidyāṃ dhāraya vācaya paryavāpnuhi | ātmano hitāya sukhāya bhikshūṇaṃ bhikshuṇīnām upāsakānām upāsikānāṃ hitāya sukhāya | iyam ānanda ṣaḍakṣarīvidyā ṣaḍbhiḥ samyaksaṃbuddhair bhāṣitā caturbhiś ca mahārājaiḥ śakreṇa devānām indreṇa brahmaṇā ca sahāpatinā | mayā caitarhi śākyamuninā samyaksaṃbuddhena bhāṣitā | tvam apy etarhy ānanda tāṃ dhāraya vācaya paryavāpnuhi |

Take up, Ānanda, this six-syllables spell, hold it, speak it, master it for your benefit and welfare and for the benefit and welfare of monks, nuns, lay men, and lay women. Ānanda, this six-syllables spell was spoken by the six completely Enlightened Ones, and by the Four Great Kings, and by Śakra, the king of the gods, and by Brahma, the Lord of the World. And now it is spoken by me, Śākyamuni, the completely Enlightened One. Now you, Ānanda, also hold it, speak it, and master it.

The six-syllables spell strings together a variety of isolated, alinguistic phonemes and words whose sources cannot easily be traced. Both the $\hat{Sardulakarnavadana}$ and the Tibetan $s\bar{u}tra$ call their spell $sadaksar\bar{u}-vidy\bar{a}$, although they do not share the wording of this mantra (Tibetan $vidy\bar{a}$ 1). The Tibetan text takes up the first four words of the Sanskrit spell in its second mantra ($vidy\bar{a}$ 2). The mantra of the $\hat{Sardulakarnavadana}$ is expressed with the words:

yad uta tadyathā | aṇḍare paṇḍare karaṇḍe keyūre 'rcihaste kharagrīve bandhumati vīramati dhara vidha cilimile viloḍaya viṣāni loke | viṣā cala cala | golamati gaṇḍavile cilimile sātinimne yathāsaṃvibhakta golamati gaṇḍavilāyai svāhā |

(Mukhopadhyaya 1954: 4-5)

Some of the terms, however, seem to be names of poisons or poisonous substances, which belong to a group called mahāviṣa ("great poisons"). Those poisons can be eliminated by the mere recitation of their names, which is already expressed in the hitherto earliest known rakṣā mantra of the Gāndhārī Manasvi-nagaraja-sūtra*, which contains an almost identical enumeration of poisons and which is concluded by the words:

Thus is (the spell) of Manasvin, thus is (the spell) of Manasvin, thus is (the spell) of Manasvin. (Who) would know the names of these great poisons has not to be afraid of human beings \dots^{21}

Strauch has further shown the connection between this list of poisons and healing illnesses, which are caused by these poisons, in the Mahāsāhasrapramardinī of the Pañcarakṣā ("Five Protections") collection. This text gives mantra words, which make poison effectless, namely andare pandare katake keyūre, and refers to diseases, such as white leprosy, visarpa decease, itch, cases of tartar, bloody abscesses, and scab, which will be destroyed alike.²²

5 The effects of the mantra

The effects of the six-syllables spell of the Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā are described in a long list of diseases against which the mantra shall prove to be effective. The healing of diseases through the help of mantras has its origin in non-Buddhist sources. Early Vedic medicine was characterized by demon-caused diseases and magical rites involving the recitation of potent charms and the application of efficacious amulets to exorcise demons and to ward off their further attacks. The principal source for medicine in early Vedic times is the Atharvaveda, as it contains a significant number of hymns and mantras devoted to healing of illnesses. During special healing rites these charms and mantras, which were considered to be more efficacious than the actual use of herbs and medicine (AV II 9.3; VI 45.2), were recited. This tradition further continues in ayurvedic treatises. The Kauśika-sūtra of the Atharvaveda lists numerous diseases, which will be cured through the utterance of mantras. Haldar summarizes them as follows:

They are securing curatives for various otherwise incurable diseases produced by the sins of past life, viz. Fever, Cholera and Diabetes; stopping the flow of blood from wounds caused by injuries from weapons, preventing epileptic fits and possession by different types of evil spirits, such as the bhūta, piśāca, brahma-rakṣas, etc.; curing vāta, pitta and Śleşman, heart diseases, Jaundice, white leprosy, different kinds of fever, Phthisis, Dropsy; during worms in cows and horses, providing antidotes against all kinds of poisons, supplying curatives for the diseases of the head, eyes, nose, ears, tongue, neck and inflammation of the neck warding off the evil effects of a Brāhmana's curse; arranging women's rites for securing sons, securing easy delivery and the welfare of the foetus.²³

Buddhist protective tetxs and their mantras were also widely employed as means to cure diseases and similar lists can be found throughout the rakṣā literature in Indian, Tibetan, and Chinese context.²⁴ At the Japanese imperial court there existed a number of "healer-meditation masters, priests well versed in dhāraṇīs for protecting the health of the ruler"²⁵ in the eighth century. An important example of this tradition is the well-known Mahāmāyūrī-vidyārājñī (henceforth: Mahāmāyūrī), another text of the Pañcarakṣā collection. The Mahāmāyūrī with its mantras was popular in its application as remedy in China and Japan in the eleventh/twelfth century.²⁶ This protective text comprises an enumeration of illnesses, and demons and other evils causing fever, corresponding to the list in the Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā. The text of the Mahāmāyūrī runs as follows:

Parts of the Mahāmāyūrī were found among the Bower Manuscript from Central Asia, a collection of medical treatises, that can be dated to the first half of the sixth century. It contains a similar list in a slightly different order (VI, 2):

teeth, chest, heart, articulations, ribs, back, stomach, bladder, piles, womb, menorrhagia, thighs, shanks, hands, feet, limbs, and minor limbs shall be removed from me.

The theme of curing any kind of disease through the recitation of mantras further continues in the Amoghapāśahṛdaya-dhāraṇī, which survives in a fragmentary Sanskrit palm-leaf manuscript from Nepal and in Tibetan and Chinese translations. The Sanskrit text gives the following list of illnesses:

ekāhikena jvareṇa | dvyāhikena vā | tryāhikena vā | cāturthikena vā | evaṃ saptāhikena vā jvareṇa | akṣiśūlena vā nāsāśūlena vā | karṇṇaśūlena vā | dantaśūlena vā | oṣṭhaśūlena vā | jihvāśūlena vā | tāluśūlena vā hṛdayaśūlena vā | udaraśūlena vā | pārśvaśūlena vā | kaṭiśūlena vā | aṅgapratyaṅgaśūlena vā | arśograhaṇiśūlena vā | atīsāreṇa vā | hastapādavedanayā vā | śirorujayā vā | valāhakaśvitrakuṣṭhavicarccikākiṭimalohaliṅgagalagrahabhagandaravisphoṭakāpasmārakākhordair anyair vā kṛtyāpakṭyair vā | vadhabandhanatāḍanatarjjanā

Fever which comes every day, every second day, every third day, every fourth day, every seventh day, pain of the eyes, nose, ears, teeth, lips, tongue, palate, heart, stomach, ribs, hips, limbs and minor limbs, piles, dysentery, hands and feet, headache, cutaneous disease (?), white leprosy, black leprosy, itch, leprosy, abscesses, compression of the throat, fistulas, boils, epilepsy, evil spirits or other demons, killing, imprisoning, beating or threatening.

6 Conclusion

The narrative context of the Tibetan Ṣaḍakṣara-vidyā is extracted from the Śārdūlakarṇāvadāna. Both texts call their protective mantra ṣaḍakṣarī-vidyā, "the six-syllables spell", although the reading of the Tibetan mantra is completely different from the Sanskrit version. The beginning of the Sanskrit mantra, however, can be found in the second vidyā of the Tibetan sūtra. These words correspond to names of poisonous substances and appear already in lists of poisons in early post-canonical protective texts. By knowing the names of these poisonous substances, their negative impact is subdued. It is through mere recitation of the mantra, that the desired effect of the protective text can be achieved. Especially remarkable is the relation of the Tibetan sūtra to the Gāndhārī Manasvi-nagaraja-sūtra, and some texts of the Pañcarakṣā collection, which shows that they follow a common tradition.

The effect of the six-syllables spell in the Tibetan $\S adak$ ara-vidy\bar{a}$ is described in a long list of illnesses, which will not occur by the means of its mantra. Almost identical enumerations of diseases can be found throughout the genre of $rak$\bar{a}$ texts in Indian, Tibetan, and Chinese context. This tradition, however, is rooted outside of Buddhist sources in the Atharvaveda and in medical treatises, like the Bower Manuscript, which further supports Strauch's suggestion, that the major source of rak, \bar{a} texts possibly lies in a scientific tradition.
