9.3. Advanced Electronic Topometry

It is only a few years since electronics were used in topometry for the first time but they have been gaining more and more importance ever since. A Swiss firm doing pioneer work in this field has just celebrated the production in its work of the 10,000th electronic topometry instrument, called a Distomat. This instrument makes it possible to measure distances to the nearest centimetre over a range of 2,000m by means of invisible infra-red rays and is used daily in over a hundred countries by surveyors, civil engineers, etc. (SODT)

9.4. New Processes for the Hygienization of Sewage Sludge.

Scientific research has shown that the use of non-sterilised sewage sludge as a fertilizer is a danger to human health. A big Swiss firm has developed processes for the hygienization of sewage sludge without impairing the fertilizing properties of the sludge. The first process, which is suitable for small and medium-size communities with a daily volume of 3 to 30 m<sup>3</sup> of raw sludge, enables the traditional two-stage sewage sludge treatment systems with aerobic and anaerobic stabilization and separate pasteurization to be replaced by more economical single-stage process. The second process is based on the action of gamma rays and is economical for medium-size and large communities having a daily throughput of 15 to 250 m<sup>3</sup> of sewage sludge. Both systems are highly automated. (SODT)
