More than 10,000 bankruptcies

In 1993, 10,500 firms and individuals Most bankruptcies were in the cantons were forced into bankruptcy - which is of Zurich (1,700), Vaud, Geneva (1,400) 680, or 6.9%, more than the year before. each), Berne (1,000) and Aargau (600). But concluded bankruptcy proceedings The biggest increases were in the cansaw a new record loss of Sfr. 2.5 billion, tons of Glarus (up 41%), Thurgau (up which is almost double the 1992 figure. 27.8%), Schaffhausen (up 25%) and Berne (up 20.6%). The number of pursuit proceedings was also once again higher than the previous year. Orders to pay increased by 9% to 1.9 million, and the number of legal seizures rose by 10% to 750,000. On the positive side, there is a fever for setting up new companies in Switzerland. In the first three months of 1994, 1,300 of these were inscribed in the trade register. Most of them were in servicing.

Huge demonstration against pension-age increase

Thousands of men and women from all over Switzerland streamed into Berne's Bundesplatz to protest against the planned increase in the pensionable age for women from 62 to 64. Women speakers from various organisations condemned the plan and demanded a more flexible pension-age arrangement. The proposal was damned as antifeminist and anti-social. It would also lead to higher unemployment figures.

The language frontier

A number of travel agencies have improved their range of services for French-speaking Swiss. They are targeting people who want to go on holiday in exclusively French-speaking groups. French speakers complain that they feel at a disadvantage in mixed-language groups, since important explanations by travel organisers are often given in German only. Also, French speakers simply do not like the sound of Swiss-German. Some find German-Swiss too pushy. "They grab their room keys just like they do parking places", an enraged French-speaking tourist told the 'Nouveau Quotidien'.

3,700 workplaces lost

In 1993, the federal government was the worst job destroyer. Most redundancies were in transport and defence. Apart from this, personnel director Peter Hablützel's report is positive. "The federal administration is becoming smaller, more female, more qualified, more language representative, more flexible and once again older", concludes the study, which is carried out once every five to seven years. At present, hours worked by the just 146,000 staff make up an equivalent of 140,000 full-time posts.
