The events in California were only the start of the year-round program of Swiss Roots (see articles on following pages)!

More memorable highlights were experienced with the viewing of the Swiss Federal Charter of 1291, known as the "Schweizer Bundesbrief" at Philadelphia's Constitution Center on its first voyage outside of Switzerland, which attracted Swiss dignitaries and historians to the "City of Brotherly Love".

Also, Ben Röthlisberger, Quarterback of the Pittsburgh Steelers has completed his journey to Switzerland and brought back fond impressions of his family's ancestry from the Bernese Emmental region. You are able to read more about his trip, how he socialized with Swiss sports fans, and how he experienced Switzerland in the various fields presented to him on our website www.swissroots.org.

The main purpose of the Swiss Roots website is to have people interact with each other, on genealogical topics but also on whatever Swiss topic is of interest to you. Many people have already contributed to the site by becoming a member, adding a story or starting discussions on a variety of issues through the message boards. Consequently, reward points are collected to retrieve nice gifts and sweepstakes for trips to Switzerland are won.

On the website, you are also able to follow the route of the Postal Bus. The next bigger attraction will certainly be a special one for the New York audience, when Swiss Roots celebrates the Swiss National Day on Ellis Island on July 29th – in presence of the Swiss postal bus (yes, it will be driven onto the island!). You will be able to read all about this in the next regional news-issue of the Swiss Revue.

On a separate note, Swiss Roots is delighted about the positive and creative suggestions for detours and extra-stops received from the Swiss Revue readers in respect to the Postal Bus Roadshow - these would definitely generate good

Who saw the Swiss Roots Postal Bus in California?

They cheered along the streets, approached the bus whenever it came to a halt and were intrigued by the technical and transportation insights given by the driver, Alfred "Fredi" Böni. As a matter of fact, I can imagine that not even Fredi himself could believe his eyes each morning when he saw his 4-wheeled companion facing the next adventures on this six-month U.S. tour.

This year Switzerland celebrates the 100th Anniversary of the yellow Postal Bus System that transports you safely from one location to another where there is no railroad connection – often along

In Los Angeles, the bus was prominently featured in a carnival parade and chauffeured the Rätz Clique from Basel to various locations.

The Press of the Greater San Francisco Bay Area met the bus on April 20. The wonderful, authentic Bus drew quite some attention at Sea Cliff in San Francisco. Two days later – a day long celebration at CAL DAY in Berkeley, CA followed - featuring a Swiss Pavilion with Swiss food, Swiss music, free yodeling classes and more attractions. 98 Swiss-American Ladies in Sausalito, CA

May 3, 2006 was an important day in many a calendar of 100 Swiss and Swiss-American women of the Greater San Francisco Bay Area. Actually the area became larger and larger as days to the deadline got shorter.

Yours truly organized a Swiss Ladies Luncheon – after not having done that for the better of 10 years. There were two reasons: not only was it long overdue – but San Francisco has a new Consul General with a wife! For 6 years we enjoyed a bachelor Consul General of Switzerland – a real terrific one!

The idea dawned on me to combine a last time venture of this caliber and the introduction of the new First Lady of Switzerland in San Francisco! The second reason was to officially announce my retirement come October from an actual working woman to a life of leisure, filled with lots of travel and an open agenda. To do more volunteer work: I started already to docent at the small Depot Museum of the Sonoma Historical Society and also in a tiny library of another local Historical League. That's all.

Based on all this I found immediately terrific sponsors for this affair. The door prize of a r/t ticket on Belair from San Francisco to

Mrs. Edith Borne, living in Marin County, was the lucky winner of a round-trip ticket from San Francisco to Zurich on Belair, donated by Herbie Mueller from Hotelplan.

Zurich, Switzerland was donated by Hotelplan of Zurich, Switzerland via their US manager Herbie Mueller! A lot of applause went through the beautiful historic Alta Mira 'Il Fornai' when the winner stepped forward with her raffle ticket in hand: we congratulate Mrs. Edith Borne, living in Marin County.

Each place setting held a large chocolate bar (72% Cocoa – new!) donated by (Lindt Switzerland owned) Ghirardelli Chocolate Co. of San Francisco – and it's CEO Jürgen Auerbach. And we thank them so very much. The applause was also deafening! Last but nevertheless least: Esther Scott, First Vice President, UBS Financial Services, Inc. in San Francisco invited to the Aperol! This most generous gesture made me almost feel a bit guilty. You see, I figured on about 30 – 50 women. And when I had the magic number 100 I stopped. Esther does accept new clients.

In Marylene Lichtenstern – my guest of Honor – we all met not just a gracious First Lady, but her short speech also enlightened us about her career as the wife of a diplomat of the Swiss Government. She is Superwoman. Not only did she accompany her husband to many general meetings of so many Swiss Societies and Clubs – no, she is also a grand hostess at their Residence in San Francisco – with a lot of flair and know-how. And what nobody knew: she also is a designer. Jewelry, fashion – even handbags. And she is very successful. I thank Marylene Lichtenstern for accepting this invitation – she was a hit!

This Luncheon was only possible with the help of Margrit Keller and Erna Stucky. And also with the help of my husband Ruedi in many details – and who physically was in the parking lot directing the parking of close to 50 cars ... To my readers who write so faithfully I promise – that here and there you will still read some articles – of subjects which are of interest to me, and hopefully to you! After all, this is my 42nd year of writing for and about the Swiss in Northern California ...

History of the Swiss Clubs in Tacoma, Washington

The Tacoma Swiss Society was established in 1889. The majority of the first Swiss in our area worked in the dairy industry. Most came from the Canton of Schwyz but other Cantons were also represented. Establishing a Swiss club provided the immigrants with a place to socialize among fellow forming the "United Swiss Singing Societies of the Pacific Coast". In 1975 they joined the Swiss Sportsmen's Club of Tacoma as a branch. They have been very active in keeping song and music alive plus attending the West Coast Sängerbund every three years. Active singers vary to 25 men.

The Männerchor "Edelweiss" was founded in 1910 and is one of the oldest choirs belonging to the United Swiss Singing Societies of the Pacific Coast countrymen. Often they helped each other in finding employment. Members had to have a Swiss last name and today's membership totals 187 men.

Tacoma Swiss Ladies

In 1908 the Swiss ladies formed the Tacoma Swiss Ladies Society "Helvetia". Ladies of Swiss descent or being married to a Swiss are entitled to membership. The Swiss ladies are a very active society with 360 members.

Männerchor "Edelweiss"

The Männerchor "Edelweiss" started in 1910 and held the first Sängerbund in 1934 with Seattle, Washington and Portland, Oregon

Swiss Rifle Club

The Swiss Rifle Club established in 1913, was once active with Portland, Oregon, the Lewis Pacific Swiss Society, Frances, Washington and Vancouver, B.C. Canada in organizing Schützenfests. Today it is more for hunting, but has become very popular for shotgun shooting, with a large young crowd participating. Easter Ham shoots and Thanksgiving and Christmas Turkey shoots are popular. Safety classes are required for all the young new members. The Swiss Rifle Club helped form the Swiss Sportsmen's Club in 1958 by merging with the Schwingers.

The beautiful Clubhouse belongs to the Swiss Sportsmen's Club but is used by all the clubs.

Swiss Schwinger Club

The Swiss Schwinger Club began in 1928 and has been an important part of our Swiss functions. Besides holding Spring and Fall Schwingfests, they participate in other clubs Schwingfests, in Washington, Oregon and California. The "Enzian" Swiss Ladies Choir began in 1988, with an active group of ladies who help keep our clubs entertained. They also are members of the United Swiss Singing Societies of the Pacific Coast.

All the Swiss clubs hold their meetings and functions at our Swiss Park. We have been very fortunate to have excellent cooperation among our combined clubs. We have Swiss musicians, yodelers, etc. to keep our Swiss tradition active. Some of our yearly functions include the following: Scholarship Dinner, Easter Hunt, Rippli Dinner & Enzian Concert, Old Timers Recognition, Männerchor Concert, Octoberfest, Swiss Dancing Lessons, Swiss Kids Camp, Kids Christmas Party, Masquerade Dance, Jass Parties, New Years Eve Party, Crab Feed, Spring & Fall Schwingfests, Golf Tournament and Ham & Turkey Shoots.

Urs Ziswiler - New Ambassador of Switzerland to the United States of America

Dear Swiss Review readers:

It is a great pleasure to introduce myself to you as the new Ambassador of Switzerland to the U.S. After having served as Swiss Ambassador to Canada until 2004, I am delighted to be back on the continent.

I commence my assignment at a time when the already thriving relations between Switzerland and the U.S. are about to be raised to a new level. Only a few weeks ago, our two governments agreed to intensify significantly our cooperation in the fields of diplomacy, trade and investment, terrorism-related investigations, and exchange of students. A Swiss-U.S. agreement on research and science cooperation is ready to be signed as well.

During my various travels through Canada and the U.S., I was always impressed by the rich heritage Swiss immigrants brought to the North American continent and the countless Swiss clubs, associations, and individuals who still cultivate this heritage. Through their activities, they make a crucial contribution to the mutual understanding of the peoples of our two nations.

I commend and applaud all those who are so active in this important field.

And I'm pleased that the promotion and celebration of Swiss-American heritage will get an additional boost this year, thanks to the nationwide project "Swiss Roots" and its innovative online platform www.swissroots.org. I encourage all of you to participate in this unique initiative.

My goal is to be a Swiss Ambassador who not only serves in the nation's capital, but is also active in the entire country. That's why I'm determined to travel, to meet and exchange ideas with as many Swiss and U.S. citizens as possible, and to visit Swiss-American communities, local businesses, and associations all over the U.S. I eagerly look forward to these encounters and hope to meet many of you in the upcoming months and years.

Yours truly,

Urs Ziswiler

Biographie of Ambassador Urs Ziswiler

Ambassador Ziswiler arrived in Washington, D.C. as Ambassador of Switzerland to the United States in May 2006. Prior to his current posting, he served as Head of the Political Directorate of the Federal Department of Foreign Affairs in Bern, as the second highest ranking diplomat in the Swiss Foreign Service. In this capacity, he was also Vice-Chairman of the Presence Switzerland (PRS) Commission, Switzerland public outreach agency.

Previously, Mr. Ziswiler served as a Senior Diplomatic Adviser to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Federal Councilor Micheline Calmy-Rey. Since joining the Foreign Service in 1979, Ambassador Ziswiler has held a number of diplomatic postings both in Bern and abroad. He served as Ambassador of Switzerland to Canada and the Bahamas (1999-2004), Chargé d'affaires a.i. in Zagreb for Yugoslavia and Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1993, Deputy Head of Mission at the Swiss Embassies in Buenos Aires (1994-1995) and Tel Aviv (1988-1990). From 1980-1985, he was Deputy Head of Mission at the Embassies in Kinshasa, Lagos, and Oslo and also served at the Swiss Mission to the European Union in Brussels.

In Bern, Ambassador Ziswiler served as Head of the Political Division for Human Rights and Humanitarian Policy and Coordinator for International Refugee Policy (1995-1999), Spokesman and Head of the Information Department of the European Integration Office (1990-1992), and in the same office, also served as Chairman of the EFTA Trade Committee (1987) and managed relationships with the EFTA countries and the former Yugoslavia (1985-1988).

Ambassador Ziswiler began his career as a junior expert for the World Bank in Madagascar and later served as a Delegate of the International Committee of the Red Cross in Beirut, Gaza, Tel Aviv, and Kampala. He holds a law degree from the Universities of Geneva and Zurich and has a post-graduate diploma on developing countries from the Federal Institute of Technology in Zurich. Ambassador Ziswiler is fluent in German, English, French, Spanish, and Italian and has a basic knowledge of Arabic.

Ambassador Ziswiler, a citizen of Buttisholz in the Canton of Lucerne, was born in Muri in the Canton of Argovia in 1949. He is married to Ronit Ziswiler and they have two children. ■

Ambassador Blickenstorfer visits Microsoft®

Redmond, WA - On March 7, Microsoft welcomed Ambassador Christian Blickenstorfer as well as the new consular team: San Francisco Consul General Jean-François Lichtenstern and Seattle Honorary Consul Philippe Goetschel. Mr. Goetschel had also invited a cross section of Swiss high tech professionals and academic researchers from Seattle to join the many Swiss employees of Microsoft in welcoming the ambassador.

The forty participants introduced themselves as they enjoyed the Microsoft-provided lunch. Honorary Consul Goetschel then thanked Microsoft for its hospieral Council and is embodied in several projects, such as an upcoming science agreement between the two countries, and recent agreements covering law enforcement, foreign affairs cooperation and the recent Trade and Investment Cooperation Forum.

Consul General Lichtenstern, recently arrived to San Francisco from Hong Kong, presented the tality and explained the twofold purpose of the meeting; first, to present the Microsoft company to the delegation. Second, to launch a series of quarterly lunches for the Swiss professional community in Seattle.

In his address, Ambassador Blickenstorfer explained how his visit fit with several current initiatives to foster relations between Switzerland and the USA. This intensification of bilateral relations has been prioritized by the Fed-activities and responsibilities of the Consulate General of Switzerland in San Francisco, and looked forward to future events in Seattle.

The last presentation was given by Christian Simm, Executive Director of Swissnex. Mr. Simm presented the multifaceted activities of Swissnex, an innovative collaboration between the Swiss government, universities and the private sector. Mr. Simm invited the participants to attend one of the many events hosted by Swissnex in San Francisco.

At the conclusion of the meal, the delegation and participants were invited to visit the Microsoft House, which showcases current and future Microsoft technology in the home setting.

Switzerland and America have a lot more in common than most people think. The two "sister republics" enjoy a longstanding relationship, well anchored in political, economic and social values, that goes back more than 200 years.

American business dynasty. In the early twentieth century, the Guggenheims were one of America's wealthiest families. Louis-Joseph Chevrolet, of La Chaux-de-Fonds origin, was the founder of the namesake Chevrolet Motor Car Company and one of the best race-car drivers in the world. And most recently, there is Renee Zellweger, whose father and grandparents came from the tiny village of Au in canton St. Gallen and spawned an Academy Award-winning Hollywood actress. On the other hand, some famous Americans – such as Charlie Chaplin, Elizabeth Taylor, Mark Twain, Yoko Ono, Michael Jackson and Tina Turner, to name a few – have also called Switzerland their home over the years. In fact, roughly 13,400 Americans live and work in Switzerland, and one million tourists from the USA visit Switzerland each year, while

Mutually prosperous economic ties

Switzerland is the USA's sixth-largest trading partner, and Swiss foreign direct investment in the USA amounted to USD 124 billion in 2004. Switzerland is the second-largest foreign investor worldwide in the US manufacturing sector, and more than 600 Swiss companies – including giants such as Nestlé, ABB, UBS, Credit Suisse and Novartis – operate in the USA, employing about half a million workers. Switzerland is the eight-largest buyer of US private services and purchases more US goods than India and Russia combined. On the other side of the coin, America is the second-largest export market for Switzerland after the EU. Moreover, US investment in Switzerland has jumped in recent years, climbing to roughly USD 100 billion annually. In addition, around 650 American companies, including Google, IBM, and McDonald's, operate in Switzerland, and some such as General Motors, Proctor & Gamble and Hewlett-Packard have also chosen the country as their European headquarters.

American consumers have a hearty appetite for Swiss cheese and chocolate, as well as for watches and Swiss Army knives. In 2004, Switzerland exported roughly CHF 14 billion in goods to the USA and imported about CHF 6 billion. Swiss exports to the USA also include high-precision machinery and tools, electronic goods, high-quality pharmaceutical and chemical products, and engineering services.

Free trade agreement on the horizon?

The close trading interrelationship between the USA and Switzerland over the years could ultimately culminate in a free-trade agreement (FTA). The two countries have been intensely engaged in the past year in exploratory talks on the feasibility of a bilateral trade pact. In September 2005, the Washington D.C.-based Institute for International Economics (IIE) presented a draft of its study on the prospects for an FTA between the USA and Switzerland. The next step would be for the two governments to commence official negotiations. But the window of opportunity is closing. The US Trade Act of 2002, which gives President George W. Bush so-called Trade Promotion Authority

Who doesn't know Ben Röthlisberger?

(TPA) to quickly push international trade agreements through Congress, expires in mid-2007. This leaves a roughly one-year window of opportunity for Switzerland to ink an agreement with the USA. However, some political pundits in Switzerland say there are still too many stumbling blocks, and concerns are mounting that the opportunity to enter into such an agreement with the world's greatest economic power is slowly slipping away. Indeed, officials at the Federal Office for Agriculture as well as the State Secretariat for Economic Affairs have recently expressed dismay over the USA's unwillingness to make concessions on key points such as trade tariffs and US imports of genetically modified foods. Furthermore, Swiss farmers say that an FTA with the USA would constitute a threat to their existence.

The political front

When it comes to political affairs, Switzerland and the USA have a unique bond. The United States does not have diplomatic relations with Cuba or Iran. But Switzerland oversees American "special interests" in those countries through its diplomatic channels there. Moreover, the cooperation is particularly noticeable with respect to issues of national security, such as the global war on terrorism, non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, money laundering and international narcotics trafficking, as well as mediation of various crises around the world. In addition, the Swiss Parliament and US House of Representatives have directly established strong political ties between the two countries. In 2001, 24 members of Parliament founded the "Parliamentary Association Switzerland-USA," representing all major political parties as well as both the Council of States and the National Council. The USA reciprocated in 2003 by creating the "Friends of Switzerland Caucus," which comprises 32 members of Congress, whose aim is to strengthen political dialogue between the two countries' legislative branches.

Historical ties

The USA and Switzerland share a long history of common values if only because both nations place a great emphasis on individual rights and an open society. Naturally then, both nations are built on a federal system: The US Articles of Confederation were modeled after the old Swiss alliance of sovereign states, and Switzerland was inspired by the US Constitution when it formed its federal state in 1848. But are you aware of some of the lesser-known Swiss-American ties?

Most Swiss have heard of General Johann August Sutter (1803-1880)

Early in the American Republic (1804) Jefferson was easily re-elected, but needed a strong hand in finances to profit from the temporary cessation of the war between England and France, which permitted American merchants to trade with both sides and produced unprecedented national prosperity. By selecting Albert Gallatin as secretary of the Treasury, Jefferson placed one of the most capable managers of fiscal policy in the most strategic location. Gallatin, a Swiss-born prodigy with impeccable Republican credentials, dominated the cabinet discussions alongside James Madison, the ever-loyal Jefferson disciple who served as secretary of state.

Most readers have heard the name General Johann August Sutter (1803-1880), Swiss immigrant who founded Neu-Helvetien (Sutter's Mill) in 1839, now Sacramento, California. Sutter played a pivotal role in the great California Gold Rush and also founded a colony in Hawaii. Did you know he is buried in Pennsylvania?

Jean Louis Rodolphe Agassiz (1807-1873) a world-famous zoologist, glaciologist and geologist is considered one of America's greatest scientists. Born of Swiss parents, he was appointed professor of zoology and geology at Harvard University and is credited with suggesting the first concept of an ice age. World War I ace fighter pilot Eddie Rickenbacker (1890-1973) was born in Columbus, Ohio to Swiss immigrants. Like many

Louis-Joseph Chevrolet, of La Chaux-de-Fonds origin, was the founder of the namesake Chevrolet Motor Car Company

Swiss-Germans, he is often mistaken as a German immigrant.

The German-Swiss-American scientist and Nobel Prize winner (1921) Albert Einstein was born in Ulm, Württemberg on March 14, 1879. He spent his early formative years in Munich. He and his family later lived in Milan, Italy and both Berne and Zurich, Switzerland. Einstein published his famous "Special Theory of Relativity" in 1905 while in Switzerland. Einstein often joked that if his work was proven true, all three nations would claim him – and if proven untrue, they would claim he 'belonged' to the other nations! He called his Swiss and American years the happiest of his life.

In an even remoter twist, actor Yul Brynner (1920-1985) was born in Vladivostok, USSR to Boris Brynner, a Swiss-Mongolian engineer, and Marousia Blagovidova, the daughter of a Russian doctor. He was named Yul after his Swiss grandfather Jules Brynner. He later lived in Paris and became an American citizen. Who would have imagined Brynner as Swiss-American?

Finally, we have US President Dwight David Eisenhower (1890-1969) born in Denison, Texas. He was the third of seven sons of David Jacob Eisenhower and Ida Elizabeth Stover Eisenhower. Their German and Swiss ancestors had arrived in America in the 1730s seeking religious freedom. Eisenhower was the first US president of all 50 states.

An enduring friendship

But for every famous name on the long list of Swiss descendants who have influenced American culture, politics and society, there are a million more who saw numerous opportunities for a new and prosperous life in a democratic America. Among these, for example, were 150 unemployed migrant textile workers from the Linth Valley, who set up New Glarus in the state Wisconsin in 1845, as well as the wine-growers from Ticino, who found a new lease on life in the hills of sunny California. Indeed, the relationship between Switzerland and America can be framed around two countries and peoples that share a number of core values, including a strong belief in freedom, democracy, international peace and security, as well as the rule of law and human rights. This is a trans-Atlantic friendship that has endured many calamities – two world wars, the Holocaust, terrorism – over the centuries and will continue to flourish amid a global sea of change.

Daniel Borel - Of men and mice!

Switzerland's population is a mere 7.2 million, and yet many Swiss scientists, businessmen, professionals, athletes, actors or artists have made contributions that have had a worldwide impact. Some products and services that we routinely use are truly the brainchildren of Swiss visionaries and entrepreneurs. That can be said of mice. They are pervasive... especially those pertaining to the computer family!

Logitech, the world's leading manufacturer of computer mice, and its current chairman and co-founder, Daniel Borel - a native of Neuchâtel/NE and early migrant to the Canton of Vaud - have done much to perpetuate the breed.

Daniel Borel graduated with a degree in Engineering from EPFL - Swiss Federal Institute of Technology in Lausanne. In 1976, he was granted a one-year scholarship from the Swiss National Science Fund and enrolled at Stanford University where he graduated with a Master's degree in Computer Science (1979) and met his future partner, Pierluigi Zappacosta with whom he co-founded Logitech (1981).

He found the energy and enterprising spirit in California electrifying. Silicon Valley was bubbling and the first indication of what was to become the "computer revolution" was in the air. After working on a "pre-desktop" publishing system for Bobst (Switzerland), and a graphical editor for Ricoh of Japan, which never materialized as commercial product, Logitech's attention was drawn by what was to become the "computer mouse", introduced on the Xerox Star System in early 1978.

At the same time, development efforts were going on at ETH Zurich (Professor Wirth), and at EPFL its Lausanne campus (Professor Nicoud's team). Thanks to its network, Logitech was able to build on the Nicoud P4 mouse and bring it from lab to market. This was the start of the venture that led to the industrialization of the manufacturing process and the beginning of a long relationship with OEM's (Original Equipment Manufacturer). OEMs - especially HP which was the first major corporation to trust the young company - were key incentives for Logitech to develop very high standards of quality, as well as mass manufacturing capabilities.

Today, Logitech is the world's leading manufacturer and marketer of computer peripherals. With the development of new applications and technologies - especially the Internet, Logitech has moved beyond the PC and into the "digital home". Its customers can now enjoy a wide range of devices designed for an array of activities - gaming, multimedia, audio and video communication over the Internet (VOIP/Instant Messaging). Its retail business includes personal peripherals for platforms beyond the PC - such as gaming consoles, portable music players, mobile phones and home entertainment systems.

Logitech employs over 8'000 people around the world. It is present on five continents and its products are sold in over 100 countries. Yearly earnings amount to U.S.$ 1.48 billion (March 31, 2005). Offices are maintained in the U.S. (Fremont/CA), Romanel-sur-Morges, VD (Switzerland), Europe, Japan and Asia.

In 1998, Daniel Borel and his wife left the U.S. to get closer to Switzerland. Guerrino De Luca became Logitech's new CEO, with Borel remaining close to the company as chairman of the Board. In October, this year, Logitech will celebrate its 25th anniversary - a remarkable feat in the very competitive computer market.

When asked where he feels at home, Daniel Borel replies "In a plane!" Nevertheless, he still keeps tight links with Switzerland. The family maintains residences in Apples/VD, London, California and the South of France. His three children seem to follow suit: His oldest son Julien works at Google's, his youngest son is a sound engineer at Dolby, San Francisco. And his daughter Laura has just been accepted at Stanford University - the proud father states.

What was the reason for his success? Hard work, passion, entrepreneurship and luck, emphasizes Daniel Borel. In this respect he feels that Switzerland needs more people ready to question the status quo, with a willingness to "get out of the box" and try the new and unknown, in order to remain competitive in the global market pace.
