Editorial. Dear Readers in the United States

I grew up in the Valais/Wallis. There, helicopters were often in the sky, and it was always something exciting. They would transport cows, hanging on a kind of harness, back to lower regions when snowfalls came too early in autumn and left them stranded high in the alps. Helicopters would land on the roof of our hospital with injured tourists, mostly during the skiing season. One memorable year an avalanche buried the railway line and the road to Zermatt. At that time helicopters had to bring down all the stranded tourists, it was quite a sight.

For the last three days, helicopters have also been flying above our house in direction of the San Bernardino Mountains. But they do not bring excited and happy memories. On the contrary, my stomach muscles tighten up, because that can only mean one thing: Fire! A few years back the fire on our hills came so close that we were told to evacuate. So cat, computers, important documents, some clothes and the two of us found refuge at a friend's house. When we came back after two days, the pool was black and everything smelled of smoke, but no other damage. These last three days we could see the smoke but it was much further away. Now it's over and I am breathing easier again, hoping very much that this summer, against all predictions from the authorities, California will be spared.

Together with all the people who sent in their pictures, I wish you all interesting reading and a Happy 1st of August!

Dear Readers,
I hope you will have fun looking at these photographs! While not all pictures are of top quality, they do have a lot of sentimental value. Depending on how much you liked them, and if I have enough space, we could do this again next year. So keep snapping pictures and send them to me, together with a very short text, indicating "who" and "where".

Swiss culture is still very much alive and strong. We celebrate with several festivals every year, like the Wilhelm Tell play; Heidi Festival; our August 1st Volksfest; and every other year, the Cheese Days in Monroe, WI. We host countless Swiss travel groups every summer. We are also home of the Swiss Cultural Center of North America, and the Don Tritt Library. The Organization of the Swiss abroad guided by great support from the Swiss Ministry of Foreign Affairs has given women married to a non-Swiss the opportunity to pass on the Swiss nationality to their children and now we are also able to vote in our home country. After I was asked to participate, I felt I would like to do this. To stay connected to Switzerland and also to keep up to date. I always had a great interest in cultural and economic happenings of Switzerland. It is extremely important to know what is going on at home, even if we live in a foreign country.

Over the past 46 years I was always involved with the Swiss Clubs where I worked and lived. I was fortunate to have moved 28 times on 3 continents. My participation with Swiss Clubs was in Singapore, Hawaii, Germany, Atlanta and many other cities. My 2 daughters and 4 grand kids are also Swiss citizens; it is vital that we never give up our roots.

Working with different cultures in numerous countries has reminded me that being Swiss is a great advantage. We Swiss should always cherish our heritage."

Book Reviews

The Swiss of New Glarus

by Kim Tschudi

This book is a title in the Images of America series, issued by Arcadia Publishing, that celebrates the history of American towns, regions, and groups in photographs. The author has assembled some 127 pictures that feature the history of New Glarus, and he has identified them in captions that reflect the intimate knowledge of a native. He arranged his rich harvest of photographs in seven chapters, each being introduced by a brief and concise introduction: In the Beginning, Farming and Agriculture, The Railroad, In Service of the Country, Around Town, Entertainment, and the Wilhelm Tell Pageant. "The genesis of this book," the author explains, "came from requests over the years for a reprint of my father's 1970 New Glarus Photograph Journal."

Kim Tschudi knows his town well, is truly proud of his Swiss heritage, and he is even prouder of being an American. Although a reader might present the background of the New Glarus people somewhat differently, the work beautifully features a Midwestern rural town's evolution and unique character, and it is a valuable addition to Swiss American history.

LEO SCHELBERT

The Thirteenth Time Zone

by David Jebb

An easy to read adventurous and somewhat biographical odyssey around the world. The author seems to have a knack for finding religious sects that help him along on his rockstrewn road. The final stage of his journey is Switzerland where he finds a woman and eternal love. He married his beautiful Swiss girl and both live again in San Diego, California where the narration of the book started.

The book can be purchased for $ 17.95 at the website www.thethirteenthtimezone.com where you can also find much more information about the author and his book.

New Orleans 1867 - Photographs by Theodore Lilienthal

By Gary A. Van Zante

The book contains photographs by Theodore Lilienthal, now in the Napoleon Museum in Arenenberg, Canton of Thurgau, Switzerland. The photographs of New Orleans constitute the first photographic survey of any American city. They were originally exhibited at the Paris Exposition of 1867 and came into the possession of Napoleon III. They were preserved but unknown outside of the Museum until 1995 when they came to the attention of Mr. Van Zante who was then the curator of the Southeastern Architectural Archive of Tulane University. The pictures were made two years after the end of the Civil War and were intended to advertise New Orleans and its recovery after the war.

In 2000 the photographs were exhibited at the Tulane University Art Gallery and the New Orleans Museum of Art and are now presented in this handsome book. It is available at Amazon.com and in bookstores.

Meerfeuer

von Monika Dettwiler

(This review is in German, as this book is only available in German.)

„Meerfeuer“ ist die Geschichte Monika Dettwiler's Urgrosseltern vor dem Hintergrund des amerikanischen Sezessionskriegs und des Schweizer Kulturkampfs der 1870er Jahre.

Die Amerika-Solothurnerin Augustine lernt in ihrem Heimatjahr Rudolf kennen. Die Katholikin und der (reformierte) Freigeist aus Bern verlieben sich, aber Augustine muss nach New Orleans zurücksegeln, in die Wirren des amerikanischen Sezessionskriegs. Acht Jahre lang fliessen Briefe und Gedichte über das Meer. Augustine und ihr Vater werden als Schweizer in New Orleans in problematische Loyalitätskonflikte verwickelt. Nach der Heirat hat Augustine kaum Zeit, sich vom turbulenten New Orleans auf die enge Stadt in der Schweiz umzugewöhnen: Sie gerät in einen Kampf, der sie tiefer trifft als der amerikanische Krieg. Augustine steht auf der Seite der romantischen Katholiken, als deren schärfster Gegner im Berner Grossrat ausgerechnet Rudolf auftritt. Der Schweizer Kulturkampf in den frühen 1870er Jahren und die kriegsähnlichen Turbulenzen im Berner Jura werden zum Prüfstand der jungen Ehe. „Meerfeuer“ ist der zweite Teil der Saga um die Berner Familie Niggeler; der erste, „Berner Lauffeuer - Roman zur Gründung des Schweizer Bundesstaates“, stand 1998 fünf Monate lang auf der Schweizer Bestsellerliste. Bundesbrief Society Plays Major Role in Helping to Build Bridge Spanning Atlantic

The Philadelphia Orchestra built a musical bridge between the USA and Switzerland on Friday, February 22, 2008, rendering its emotional performance of "An Alpine Symphony" by Richard Strauss in the Philadelphia Kimmel Center. The audience of Swiss and Americans had been able to watch the Philadelphia concert simultaneously on Friday at 2pm Philadelphia, and at 8pm Swiss time via a live Internet feed, directly to a concert hall at ETH in Zurich. Both audiences gave the American orchestra a standing ovation following its program and two encores - yearning for the clank of cowbells and the whistle of alpine wind.

rector Maestro Charles Dutoit, a Lausanne Switzerland native, took the stage for "An Alpine Symphony" and raised his arms to start the piece, the audience immediately hushed in anticipation. Thunderous applause and cries of "Bravo!" rang out from the crowd of some 2,000 at the Kimmel Center, Verizon Hall that jumped to its feet after the music ended. To add a Swiss touch, an Alphorn Duet was played in the Lobby prior to the concert. A Swiss reception organized by the Bundesbrief Society immediately followed the event, sponsored by Ricola, SwissRoots and the Consul General of New York, Ambassador Christoph Bubb.

New York Idil Vice

Making Fashion in Manhattan

The young girl from St. Gallen emigrated at age 25. Disappointed with her career in graphic design, and encouraged by a boy friend that kept talking about New York, that's where she went. Born of Turkish parents, Idil Doguoglu soon changed her name to Idil Vice (it just sounds like Edelweiss) to emphasize her Swiss origin. She didn't really intend to go into that direction, it kind of just happened! She always liked fashion and was looking for something that allowed her to express herself. "I must have hit the right spot," she says, "because I was really naïve and just started showing my designs." After only two weeks she was able to present her own creations in a show. Today, Idil is 41 years old, employs seven persons full time and about 40 persons part time. She counts Madonna, Sarah Jessica Parker and the singer/icon Gwen Stefani among her clients. Prints from well-known people are typical for her present fashion. Bob Marley, Elvis or Slash, the guitarist from Guns N' Roses figure on her tops or skirts. Idil was not only lucky in business, but also in love. For the past three years she has been married to the photographer Carl Posey whom she met at a fashion photo shoot. All the pictures in this article are from him. Idil Vice models are available in various Department Stores and Boutiques. Prices range from 40 Dollars to 700 and more. See her fashion at www.idilvice.com. The newest venture is Idil's Online Shop, open since last March. Check it out at www.idilvicefashionrocks.com.

Oregon Living close to nature

Swiss Straw Bale House

Christian & Regula Heeb, from St. Gallen, Switzerland moved permanently to the Resort City of Bend, Oregon in 1998. Drawn by the relative liberal community, the unspoiled great outdoors and the convenient location close to Americas West Coast, they bought a 40 acre piece of high desert on the edge of Bend. The secluded property, tucked in a cul de sac, is bordered on two sides by the Deschutes National Forest. It has great views of the majestic Cascades Mountains. The volcanoes of the Sisters, Mount Bachelor and even Mount Jefferson can be seen from the site.

This is their story:

"True to our calling to live close to nature we decided to have as low an impact on the land as possible. In 1998 we built a straw bale house in the center of the property. While there is a regular wood frame to the house, all the walls are actually filled with straw bales. This construction type takes less wood than regular construction and uses a waste product like straw, whose insulation factor is simply phenomenal.

The interior and exterior shell of Rancho Las Hierbas, as the house is called, was finished in stucco to give it a modern Southwest feeling. It is not hooked up to the grid. All energy is created on site by photo voltaic cells. There are cells for hot water as well. Propane is used for cooking and sometimes in the winter for hot water generation if there isn't enough sunlight.

Radiant floors heated by propane are only used if we are not at home during the winter months. If we are at home, we heat the whole house with wood firing in our masonry heater, which also functions as pizza and bread oven. It is similar to a European "Kachelofen". Most days during winter the oven needs to be lit only for some hours in the late afternoon. The southern exposure of the large living room windows further helps keeping the house warm. We decided initially to just use sixteen solar panels with 75 Watts each. Now of course there are much more efficient panels available. While we still work on our computers, we are renowned travel and nature photographers and most of our work is done digitally. We had to change our life to adjust to a low energy use. The computer screens, the washing machine and the fridge are all low energy. We have no hair dryers or cloth dryers. Hanging the laundry outside is the best way to dry it in Bend. In the high desert this takes hardly half a day. There is never an unnecessary lamp turned on. All light bulbs are energy efficient.

mountain lion."

Christian & Regula Heeb have been traveling the world for major European and US publishers for 20 years. After time spent in the deserts of Australia, Africa and the USA, they decided to leave Europe behind. Christian says: "Switzerland is a beautiful country that works. There is really not much to be said about it in a negative way besides that there was not enough space for us. Where in Switzerland could we have found a 40 acres pro-

We don't use digital alarm clocks or any other little energy suckers.

Since the natural surroundings of the house were left untouched, herds of mule deer nibble just outside the large glass windows at their favorite food, the bitter brush. Golden mantled ground squirrels, chipmunks and the elusive bobcat frequent the immediate surroundings, as do coyotes and the occasional property in a pretty natural state and built a house on it?"

Christian Heeb is a proud member of the Society of American Travel Writers. His images are represented through fine photo agencies worldwide. His own database has over 18'000 images. To see the pictures and read more about Rancho Las Hierbas or to contact the Heeb's, go to: www.heebphoto.com

Timing is everything

Patrick Puton was born in Switzerland, the land of watchmaking. His mother was a watchmaker. His father became president of Rolex in the United States. And now he is founder and president of Excel Time Service, a year-old company in Coral Gables that repairs mechanical and quartz watches. All his highly skilled watchmakers are Cuban, including master watchmaker Federico Rodriguez, who at age 63 has 45 years of watch repair on his résumé.

All the highly skilled watchmakers are Cuban. Their workbenches face North. "Northern light is important for a watchmaker - no glare and it doesn't get too hot!"

The young company specializes in repairing Rolexes, but it also repairs watches by Cartier, Omega, Longines, Rado, and Hamilton, along with many other brands, including Cuervo y Sob-rinos, a Cuban watch. Buying luxury watches has been popular for 20 years, with sales of luxury brands jumping 16 percent in the past year alone. For owners of expensive watches, maintenance is important. "Just because you own a Mercedes Benz doesn't mean it doesn't need service." That's where Puton's business comes in. Puton, 46, opened in the Alhambra Tower in September 2006, after nearly a year of assembling the unique work space that watchmakers require. His nearly 2,000-square-foot space on the 12th floor faces north. "Northern light is important for a watchmaker," he explains. "And it's not so hot." The workbenches, made locally, are modeled after the traditional watchmaker's bench in Switzerland, with indented arm rests that help keep the watchmaker's hands steady.

It is a job that cannot be rushed. It might take three or more hours. The average repair bill is $250, varying according to the complexity of the problem.

Puton expects revenue to reach $450,000 by the end of this year, and he plans to expand his space. He wants to add more watchmakers to his staff and perhaps, sometime in the future, to franchise Excel. For more than 20 years, Puton has specialized in watches. He served as a senior executive at Rolex Watch USA, and was a project manager for Rolex of Canada. He also served as a management consultant and later senior executive to the luxury group LVMH (Louis-Vuitton-Moët-Hennessy). But Puton never studied watchmaking. "I did take a watch apart once," he admits. He didn't say whether he put it back together again.

Oklahoma

FC Basel

Celebration in Tulsa

Saturday May 10, 2008, the day of the Swiss Soccer Championship Finalissima between FC Basel and Young Boys Berne, the Swiss Club of Oklahoma was scheduled to have their traditional monthly Jass Abend at Eugene and Patricia Hodels lovely home. Well, it turned out to become an event of spontaneous celebration and joy after the well deserved victory of our favorite team FC Basel. The glasses were heaved to this success, the Stimmung was great and some had extra luck in playing cards, some others not.

Swiss friends of Oklahoma having a good time

For any one Swiss rooted person in Oklahoma, South Kansas and Western Arkansas, we welcome you to join a great group of very diverse friends to enjoy some good and fun time together five times a year and monthly if you like to Jass.
