The Balli Family in Australia and New Zealand¹

Christian Balli

Zusammenfassung

In der zweiten Hälfte des 19. Jahrhunderts sind viele Tessiner nach Kalifornien und Australien ausgewandert, um dort ihr Glück zu suchen. Unter jenen, die nach Australien ausgereist sind, findet man drei Mitglieder der Familie Balli: Alessio und Antonio verliessen im Jahre 1854 Caveragno, während Giovanni im gleichen Jahr aus Locarno auswanderte.

Alle haben sich im Staate Victoria niedergelassen, hatten aber unterschiedliche Lebenswege. Der erste war drei Monate als Bergmann in Spring Creek tätig, wo er dann an Ruhr starb. Der zweite arbeitete als Kohlenbrenner im Bezirk Bendigo, wo er sich mit Augusta Pabst aus Hannover vermählte. Heute leben in Australien zahlreiche Nachfahren des Ehepaares; bei den meisten wurde aber der Familienname auf englische Art eingetragen, und sie heissen nun Balle.

Was die Nachfahren von Giovanni Balli, der Marion Heasman geheiratet und als Bergmann gearbeitet hat, anbelangt, leben sie in Neuseeland und heissen Caldwell nach dem zweiten Ehemann von Marion Heasman. Somit wird heute in Australien der ursprüngliche Name fast nur noch von fernen Nachfahren von Pietro Antonio Anastasio (1797 in Caveragno geboren und nach Harlingen in Holland ausgewandert) geführt, da einer von ihnen, Marten Sikke Balli, sich im Jahre 1952 in Tweed Heads (NSW) niederliess, wo er mit seinem Sohn Ferdinand und drei Enkelkindern (Chelsea, Krisky und Cameron) lebt.

tune. Parmi ceux qui partirent pour l'Australie, on compte trois membres de la famille Balli: Alessio et Antonio quittèrent Caverigno en 1854 et Giovanni partit de Locarno la même année.

Tous se sont établis dans l'Etat de Victoria mais n'ont pas eu la même chance. Le premier travailla trois mois à Spring Creek comme mineur et mourut de dysenterie. Le deuxième fit le charbonnier dans le district de Bendigo, où il se maria avec Augusta Pabst, née à Hanovre. De nombreux descendants de ce couple vivent aujourd'hui en Australie, mais la plupart portent un nom de famille écrit à l'anglaise et s'appellent Balle.

Quant aux descendants de Giovanni Balli, qui se maria avec Marion Heasman et travailla aussi comme mineur, ils sont établis en Nouvelle Zélande et s'appellent Caldwell, du nom du deuxième mari de Marion Heasman. Aujourd'hui, le nom d'origine n'est donc quasiment porté que par les lointains descendants de Pietro Antonio Anastasio (né à Caverigno en 1797 et émigré à Harlingen en Hollande). Un desquels, Marten Sikke Balli, s'établit en 1952 à Tweed Heads (NSW), où il vit avec son fils Ferdinand et trois petit-fils: Chelsea, Krisky et Cameron.

Riassunto

Nella seconda metà del 19° secolo, numerosi ticinesi emigrarono in California e in Australia in cerca di fortuna. Tra coloro che emigrarono in Australia, si annoverano tre membri della famiglia Balli: Alessio e Antonio, partiti da Caverigno nel 1854, e Giovanni, partito lo stesso anno da Locarno.

Tutti si stabilirono nello stato del Victoria, ma non ebbero la stessa fortuna. Il primo lavorò tre mesi a Spring Creek quale minatore, per poi morire di dissenteria. Il secondo fece il carbonaio nel distretto di Bendigo dove sposò Augusta Pabst, nata ad Hannover. Oggi vivono in Australia numerosi discendenti di questa copia, molti dei quali portano però un cognome scritto all'inglese e si chiamano Balle.

Quanto ai discendenti di Giovanni Balli, che sposò Marion Heasman e fu attivo quale minatore, vivono in Nuova Zelanda e portano il cognome Caldwell, ricevuto dal secondo marito di Marion Heasman. Tra i pochi a chiamarsi Balli vi sono oggi i lontani discendenti di Pietro Antonio Anastasio (nato a Caverigno nel 1797 ed emigrato ad Harlingen in Olanda). Uno dei quali, Marten Sikke Balli, s'è stabilito nel 1952 a Tweed Heads (NSW), dove vive con il figlio Ferdinand e tre nipoti: Chelsea, Krisky e Cameron.

In his "History of the Vallemaggia", Michele Patocchi recounts that "in the year 1850 several courageous and robust young men emigrated to the remote lands of California and Australia and within a short time were able to send a great deal of money to their native country. This was sufficient to spark a great desire to emigrate in the whole valley due to the scarcity of food and exceptionally bad harvests in those years. Groups of 30, 40, 50 young and old at a time, from all walks of life, left for the harbours of Le Havre, London, Liverpool, and Hamburg in order to set sail for California and Australia".²

During the year 1854 in the wake of this exodus twenty men, both young and old, from Caveragno, decided to go to Australia in search of gold. They appealed to the town council for the financial support required for this voyage. The patrician assembly called a meeting to discuss the matter and on 18 June 1854 the assembly "unanimously approved on the followed conditions:

I° The patrician assembly shall provide each individual intending to leave for Australia with capital amounting to 1200 (one thousand two hundred) francs with 4 per cent interest payable annually.

II° Each person to receive the requested sum shall pay in advance a proportionate interest of 4 per cent by and including December 1854.

III° During a peremptory time period of two years neither the beneficiaries nor their guarantors may be badgered about the interest on the requested loans.

IV° The Town Council is authorized to execute the decision which was taken into consideration".³

Among the 22 patricians of Caveragno who requested a loan were Alessio and Antonio Lotti Balli. It may be assumed from the contract signed by them on 18 September 1854 that of the 1000 francs loaned to them, 135 francs were destined to reimburse councilor Valentino Alessandro Balli of Caveragno for the amount previously paid to the “Emigration Office Franz v. Erlach in Berne as a contracted advance on their transport from Basel to Melbourne”.⁴

As in the case of the other emigrants this loan agreement was “concluded and made public in the offices of Giacomo M. Balli of Caveragno on the second floor of his house” by his son, notary Giacomo Balli.⁵

A few days later the group left for Hamburg to board the “Luise” which set sail on 10 October 1854 and arrived in Melbourne on 18 March 1855. The voyage took 5 months and was not simple, as Giacomo Beltrami, who had missed the “Luise” and had to board the “Europa” on 8 November instead, arrived in Melbourne before the others!⁶

In Australia Alessio and Antonio Lotti Balli⁷ settled in the state of Victoria but were not equally fortunate. The former left Caveragno at the age of 44 and worked for three months at Spring Creek (district of Hepburn) as a miner and died later of dysentery. His death certificate was witnessed by Pietro Dadò who embarked with him from Hamburg. The latter worked as a charcoal-burner in the district of Bendigo where in 1871 he married Augusta Pabst, born in Hanover (Germany) in 1848. According to one of his descendants the couple lived on a small island in Lake Crusoe, until they were forced to leave by the local authorities, which wanted to use the lake as a reservoir.⁸

Antonio and Augusta had six children, but only the first, John Baptist Balli (1867 – 1924), had descendants. While working in

⁸ (II) (a); Antonio Balli was listed as a voter at Elysian Flat (Bendigo), s. (4) and (5) p. 211.

Bendigo as a miner, he married Charlotte Jane Taylor in 1892 who died there in 1951. The couple had seven children, one of whom, Percival Tyras (1895 – 1958), was enlisted in the Australian Imperial Forces during the Great War. Evacuated from Gallipoli (Dardanelles), he was sent to Amiens in France where he was wounded twice before being sent to Harewood House in England for convalescence. He died in Bendigo without children unlike the other sons of John Baptist Balli.⁹ One of them, Stanley Sebastian (1900 – 1949), married Joyce Vercoe (1899 – 1976), and continued working as a miner in Bendigo. The family name, perhaps on the initiative of a registrar, began to be spelled differently in English. And that is why there are numerous descendants bearing the surname Balle.

In 1854 Giovanni Balli left Locarno and on 17 November of that year he boarded the “Almora” in Liverpool to arrive in Melbourne on 13 February 1855. Working as a miner, he married Marion Heasman (ca. 1842 – 1890) in Daylesford in 1863 where two sons were born: James in 1864 and George in 1865 (who was taken into custody by his maternal grandparents and died at Emerald Hill in 1870).¹⁰

Marion Heasman Balli who was already pregnant with her third child boarded the “Taranaki” on 11 October 1866 destined for Hokitika in New Zealand where gold had been found. In the meantime Giovanni was recovering in a hospital in Melbourne where he died on 19 May 1867.

On 2 May 1867 William Balli (1867 – 1958) was born in Hokitika in New Zealand as the third son of Giovanni. Marion Heasman Balli married William Caldwell, her second husband, who adopted the young child.

William assumed his adoptive father's surname, and thus his descendants in New Zealand are known by the name of Caldwell.

As the descendants of Antonio and Giovanni lost their original surname, the few still bearing the name Balli are distant relatives of Pietro Antonio Anastasio (born in Caveragno in 1797 having emigrated to Harlingen in Holland). One of them, Marten Sikke Balli, moved to Tweed Heads in Australia in 1952 where he lives with his
