CHARLES H. LOHR

Medieval Latin Commentaries on Aristotle in Manuscripts in Libraries Outside of Italy

(According to Kristeller, Iter italicum III)

Paul Oskar Kristeller's Iter italicum (I–II. Italy, London–Leiden 1967–1977; III. Alia itinera I: Australia to Germany, London–Leiden 1983) is meant to provide a comprehensive inventory of manuscript sources for the study of Renaissance thought and humanism. Kristeller himself describes his work as a list of philosophical, scholarly and literary manuscripts in Latin that were copied during the period between 1300 and 1600. But he has cast his net very widely. His inventory covers not only humanistic writings like rhetoric, history, epistles, and literature, but also the productions of the professors in the four traditional university faculties of philosophy, theology, law, and medicine. Because he has included mathematics, music, and astronomy along with works on natural philosophy, the Iter is an indispensable source for the history of the sciences. Since he has not omitted material like the statutes of hospitals, universities, and colleges Kristeller's work lays the groundwork for a new history of intellectual institutions during the long period under consideration.

The Iter italicum also provides the basis for a history of the literary genres used in the Middle Ages and Renaissance. Because of his association with the Catalogus translationum et commentariorum (Washington D.C. 1960 ff.) Kristeller has included in the Iter Latin translations of and commentaries on classical Greek and Latin authors, some of the most important of which are the Aristotelian translations and commentaries made between 1300 and 1600.

In my inventories of «Medieval Latin Aristotle Commentaries» (published in Traditio 23–30, 1967–1974) and «Renaissance Latin Aristotle Commentaries» (published in Studies in the Renaissance 21, 1974, and Renaissance Quarterly 28–34, 1975–1981) I was able to make use of volumes I and II of the Iter. Now, following the publication of the Alia itinera, I would like to supplement these inventories with references to the Aristotle commentaries listed in volume III. For this purpose, Professor Kristeller has generously made available to me the indexes prepared by his assistants, so that I can hope that this supplement is more or less complete.

The material for the period after 1500 will be included in a new edition of my 'Renaissance Latin Aristotle Commentaries' to appear this year. The present note covers the medieval commentaries (MLAC). For the format I have followed that used by R. J. Durling in his 'Guide to the Medical Manuscripts Mentioned in Kristeller's Iter italicum III' (published in Traditio 41, 1985, 341–365). I have always supplied a reference to volume and page in Kristeller (Kr), along with a reference, where relevant, to my own MLAC. I have not added the dates of birth and death, except for such authors as are not found in my inventories.
