would in no way be obliged to take part in confrontational military actions under the UN banner (eg. Iraq / Iran conflict).

Last year, Switzerland paid a total of Sfr470 million to the United Nations, making it one of the "most important payers". Reliable calculations show that membership would increase this expenditure by 'only' a further amount of Sfr36 million. On the other hand, this money is returned to Switzerland five to six-fold. UN activities support the annual Geneva economy by Sfr2½ - 3 billion. Presently, Geneva is still the most important location in Europe, but opposition is becoming very acute. At the same time Switzerland's observer status is now only marginal. Of the 17 observer nations which existed at the beginning of 1948, only one other, the Vatican City, still remains. The Federal Council stresses the point that at present the country is already performing the more important duties on a voluntary basis, but forfeits the most important right - to be able to vote and elect as a member in UNO General Assembly.

Summary of "ONE WAY TICKET TO NEW ZEALAND"

MA -thesis - Auckland 1998

by HELEN BAUMER

1. Part; with permission to print from Helen Baumer.

The aim of my research was to fill in some of the gaps relating to migration since the Second World War, in particular the reasons for this migration, the travel experiences of the Swiss who migrated, and the degree of integration of Swiss New Zealanders into their adopted country. To this end I conducted 50 interviews with Swiss living in the Auckland, Waikato and Coromandel areas.

Swiss contact with New Zealand date back two centuries, to 1777. The first Swiss to set foot in both Australia and New Zealand was almost certainly a man called John Webber, whose father was a Wäber from Berne.

Although every care has been taken to ensure that accurate points and placings have been printed, as well as correct spelling of names, we apologise for any errors which may be found.

A big "Thank You" to all competitors for taking part in the competitions, and congratulations to all the medal winners. This year we have two "treble" winners - Henry Werffeli from Auckland and Bert Flühler from Hamilton. It's also encouraging to see some junior members involved in medal competitions, and hopefully next year we'll see even more.

- John accompanied Captain Cook on his third voyage, performing the duties of artists. In addition to his paintings of Cook's ship Resolution, he was responsible for many memorable paintings of Cook, including his Death of Captain Cook.

- A number of Swiss names are to be found amongst the Europeans who came to New Zealand in the 1850's; For instance, three Swiss are to be found on a list of "land claimants" in Auckland in 1855, two of them watch-makers and jewellers. In the following decade, a number of Swiss arrived in the South Island in search of gold, one of them being Jakob Laufer. His name (misspelt Louper) was given to a peak and a river in the South Island.

- One of the gold seekers, Felix Hunger, was the first Swiss to settle in Taranaki, in 1867. He established himself as a blacksmith in Normanby. Some years later Hunger returned to his native town of Nufenen in Graubünden and persuaded 24 of his relatives to join him. The Swiss were to become a significant dairying group in Taranaki, and this area was the most important area of Swiss settlement until well after the Second World War.

- According to New Zealand census, Swiss now constitute the seventh largest continental European grouping, after the Dutch, Germans, South Slavs, French, Italians and Poles. Registration with the Swiss Embassy in Wellington totalled 5263 in October 1997, and actual numbers are likely to be very considerably higher than this.

- However little work has been done on Swiss immigration to New Zealand, apart from a short essay by Irène Weber-de Candolle dated 1967, which focuses mainly on nineteenth century migration.

- In the fifty post war years covered by my study the time taken to travel from Switzerland to New Zealand has fallen dramatically. The earliest migrant in my interview sample emigrated in 1949, travelling on an Italian ship, the Ogolino Vivaldi, from Genoa. The trip took seven weeks and the ship docked in Naples, Port Said, Adelaide and Melbourne on its way to Sydney. From Sydney he flew to Auckland in a flying boat which landed in Mechanics Bay.

Checking his tickets, which he still keeps at his farmhouse in the Waikato, the 78-year-old active farmer told me that his trip had cost 195 New Zealand pounds for the ship and 28 pounds for the flying boat, a total of 223 pounds.

Most migrants of the early years did the entire trip by ship: the Toscana from Genoa, the Orontes from Naples or Tilbury, the Oceania from Naples or the Sibajak from Rotterdam or Amsterdam. In at least three cases the trip took them to Australia, from whence they were 'ferried' across the Tasman by the Wanganella or, in one case, the Corinthic.

- In this latter case, my interviewee was travelling with two Swiss friends and arrived in Sydney at the time of a strike. They were unable to continue their journey with the Wanganella as planned, and instead the three travelled in luxury on the Corinthic, sitting on the bed and playing Swiss cards. This migrant remembers that "there were lots of knobs on the wall. One of them was labelled "fruit". We wanted to see what would happen if we pressed it. We pressed like mad and a chap came in with a bowl of fruit - it was ten o'clock at night! There was everything: grapes, bananas, everything you can imagine. After that we got a bowl of fruit every night.

By the sixties at least half the immigrants interviewed in my study were arriving by plane. The last migrants to arrive by ship came during the seventies.

Lucerne boasts a new tourist attraction

The new concert hall has been inaugurated in Lucerne. With its striking example in modern architecture (the roof is flat and the size of 2 soccer fields) it is proving to be a real draw card for tourists. This new building by French architect Jean Nouvel is now a fitting place to hold the Lucerne music festival which ends on Sept 16.

In the eighties and nineties, the cost of air travel had fallen so far that a large proportion of migrants were able to visit the country for a 'reconnaissance trip' prior to actual immigration.

I asked all of my interviewees about the reasons which had prompted them to leave Switzerland. Most of them gave more than one reason..

- For a small number of emigrants, the hope of setting up a business was the main reason for leaving Switzerland. A French-speaking emigrant to Auckland in the seventies was a classic case of the rags-to-riches dream. From nothing, he and his New Zealand wife set up a successful French restaurant, bought the building it was located in and purchased their own house, all within five years. A very recent emigrant to Auckland made similar comments: "It was part of the New Zealand dream: Being able to set up your own business. I don't think it would have been so easy in Switzerland." Even those who did not set up their own businesses were prompted, in some cases, to leave Switzerland in the hope of better job opportunities abroad. Swiss chefs constitute one notable group in this category.

- In the sixties and seventies the urge to travel prompted many decisions to leave Switzerland. In those days travel to countries as far away as Australia and New Zealand was too time-consuming and costly to be considered in the form of a holiday, as is possible nowadays, so most travellers migrated, some of them even taking advantage of assisted passages.

- Three emigrants of the eighties and three of the nineties mentioned environmental reasons as their motivation for emigrating. For instance, one interviewee who left in the eighties and now lives in Auckland, gave a graphic illustration of the kind of concerns that prompted her family's emigration: "We left a year after Chernobyl and the Sandoz fire. Everything happened in that one year: one thing after another. The children were small and we were rushing around all the time, looking for meat from abroad (...) and milk powder for A..., who was still feeding from a bottle. It was a catastrophe.
