"Have You Registered to Vote in Federal Elections?"

Dear Follow Citizens,
If you hold a Swiss passport, you have the right to vote in Swiss federal elections. This principle is well established and applies to double nationals as well. Have you registered to vote?

The right to vote is a tangible sign that your fellow citizens want to maintain legal and civil links with you and are asking you to help shape the future of our country. It does not matter where you live, what language you speak, and what ties you have established in your country of residence. Why? In a direct democracy as ours, every voice counts, even distant ones. We cherish the pluralism of opinion. It makes us stronger in the end. Don't spurn this generous offer.

Switzerland is ready to protect you. You should do likewise. No country can survive unless you and others like you want it to go on and remain sovereign and independent. Don't take Switzerland, or any country, for granted.

Finally, in the next few years many matters of direct importance to you will come up for a vote. An example is the reform of the welfare state, in which you have a stake - directly or indirectly. Don't miss out.

At present, only about 10% of Swiss citizens registered with the Embassy have also registered to vote. We can do better. I'm looking forward to announcing, at the next meeting of the Swiss Society of New Zealand in Hamilton next June, that we have doubled the percentage - that we have 500 more registered voters. It is an ambitious, but not an impossible target. Just register yourself and convince another Swiss to register with you, and it's done.

The Embassy stands ready to facilitate the procedure.
