Makeup – not made up!

Ancient Egyptian women used dark gray eye paint around their eyes. They thought it made them look beautiful and protected them from harm. The paint also had ingredients that kept flies away.

In the 1500s in England, pale skin was highly valued because it showed you were wealthy and didn't have to work outdoors in the sun. Women used a mixture of white lead and vinegar to make their skin look as white as possible. They even painted on fake veins. The lead, however, turned out to be poisonous and made them sick.
