A CONTRIBUTION TO THE
HISTORY OF A GERMANIC PREFIX
IN FRENCH AND THE FRENCH DIALECTS

I

In the following notes I have attempted to carry forward the suggestions made by Baist, Romanische Forschungen, XII, 650.

Baist, starting from the forms firbanniti, ferbanniti, ferbatudo of the charters of the Merovingian period, explained the for- of the O. French forms forbannir and forbattre by labialisation of the vowel of Frankish fir-, fer-. In his view the for-, four- of French verbs of the type forfaire, fourvoyer are in origin Germanic, and the influence of L. foris seen in such O. Fr. forms as forsfaire, forspaisier, or of L. fortis in such an O. Fr. form as fortclore, is secondary.

Before undertaking an examination of the possible survivals in the dialects of North France and Belgium of the formation FIR-, FER- + root + infinitive termination, I have borne in mind several things :

a) that there is no trace of such forms in the dialects of the Spanish peninsula ;

b) that there is no trace of such forms in the Italian dialects ; for although Italian dictionaries of the xviiith century insert fuorsennare, fuoruscito, forfare and forfatto, forsennaria and forviare, these words, which occur in Italian texts of the xiiiith century, are taken from French ;

c) that for O. Provençal Raynouard can only quote forfaire, forsfar ; forgitar ; foriessir ; forjujar, forsjutgar ; forlinhar ; forostar ; forsenar ; forvenir ; forviar ;

d) that an examination of the modern vocabulary of South France as portrayed in Mistral's Tresor — and less exhaustively in the ALF — quickly confirms the impression that in South France the influence of the formation here discussed was small.

Turning back to North France, we may say that the forms ferbanniti, ferbatudo of the Merovingian charters show two things clearly :

- a) the formation here discussed is old (from A. D. 500-750) ;
- b) the prefix fir- or fer- was combined with both Latin and Germanic roots.

The evidence found in Godefroy (God.) proves that verbs formed by this parasynthetic method were in the preliterate period extremely common, but at the same time indicates, it seems to me, a tendency to the slow elimination of such verbs. For of the many verbs with the prefix for-, four- which God. has culled from texts of the xiith to the xvith century the great majority are backed by a single text. Further, if we neglect the well attested verbs used in legal language (forfaire, forligner, formarier, etc.), it may be said that of the many verbs with the prefix for-, four-, which are found in God., hardly any have survived. On the other hand, it is clear that other such verbs are still found in dialects which are not attested in God. from Old or Middle French texts. To speak only of Walloon, Grandgagnage gives forcuidier, forloper, forlozer, forparler, forpartir, forsôler, forvanter, forvirer, forvîri (= forvieillir), forzarder, forzoumer as still in use. A charter of Ciney of 1586 quoted by Haust, Étym. franç. et wall., 140 mentions " les amendes de forcheruwaiges et forherbages " and so points to the existence of verbs forcharuer and forherber in the past. It seems certain that an examination of medieval documents from the Archives of the Walloon towns and of the departments of North France would add considerably to the list of verbs with for-, four noted by God.

Turning to Modern French, the DG (Dictionnaire Général) has inserted 18 words with for-, four- : the verbs forbannir, forcener, forclore, forfaire, forhuer (-huir), forligner, forlonger, formuer, fornouer, forpayser, fortitrer, fourvoyer, also forlançure (from forlancer), formariage (from formarier), forpaison (connected with forpâitre), fortrait (from fortraire), forvétu (from forvétir), fourbu (from fourboire) ; to these may be added faufiler for earlier forfiler, faux-fuyant for forfuyant from an unattested forfuir*, faux-marcher from formarcher. The archaic character of this vocabulary is evident : seven of the words are old terms of hunting ; five belong to the terminology of feudal law ; four are technical terms of cloth manufacture and forestry. Bescherelle in his Dictionnaire National notes many other words of this class; but they are old terms of feudal and customary law: forcommander, forgager, forgagner, forjuger, forjurer, formort, formouture, forprise, fortraire; forjouer as a term of medieval chivalry, forisir from Rabelais; and the technical forlâchure, and forcultiver. The only words of this class which are not in either the DG or Bescherelle, and are noted by Cotgrave in 1611 are forcheminer, forchasser, forconseiller, forconter, forparler and forregarder, and three of these: forcheminer, forconseiller and forparler are starred as archaic. It is clear that the history of this class of French verbs may be summed up as follows: There were in the preliterate period (500-1100) a very large number of parasynthetic verbs of the type for-, four- + Germanic or Latin root + infinitive termination. They are still quite numerous in the Old and Middle French period (1100-1600); but after 1600, their number has uninterruptedly been falling, and with the disappearance of feudal law and the old ways of hunting, the chief representatives of the series in Modern French are probably se faufiler, faux-fuyant, forcené and fourvoyer.

The next thing I should note is that if we may judge from the Old and Middle Fr. forms with for-, four- attested in God., it would appear that the cases of such forms, in which the root was Germanic, were very rare; forbannir, forbeter, forbouter, forsener are the most outstanding. Even if we bear in mind that the verbs with a Latin root such as foraler and forfaire were in origin adaptations from Germanic verbs such as those represented by Middle Dutch and Flemish vergaen, verdoen, the number of the verbs with a Latin root is remarkable. This state of things is confirmed by an examination of the Modern Walloon verbs already noted; of the eleven given, three only have a Germanic root, namely forloper, forlozer and forzoumer. So too, if we examine all the verbs with the prefix for-, four- occurring in Cotgrave, Bescherelle and the DG, the only ones which have a Germanic root are forbannir, forcener and fortitrer.

My object, in the investigation here undertaken, has been to examine how far this parasynthetic mode of verb-formation had left in French and in the dialects of North France and Belgium other words than those which have initial for-, four-. I have therefore made no special reference to the numerous verbs with for-, four- found in Old, Middle and Modern French. I have in fact only referred to them in so far as they might bring light upon another set of verbs formed in the same manner. My investigation led me to pass in review such words as offer in the first syllable the combination of a dentilabial and a vibrant, in other terms words presenting in the initial syllable :

- a) four-, for- ; fur-, feur- ; far-, fer-, fir- ;
- b) vour-, vor- ; vur-, veur- ; var-, ver-, vir- ;
- c) any metathetic form of these.

I was led to this in part by the examination I made of the verbal types ferlamper ; ferlaper ; ferlocher and ferloquer ; ferloper and ferlouper ; ferlucher and ferluquer, the results of which were given in the Proceedings of the Leeds Philosophical Society, II, 26-31, 32-35. It was evident that if a verb contained the Frankish prefix FIR-, FER- in the initial syllable, e. g. fretiller, then the second syllable contained the Germanic or Latin root, and the verbal substantive from such trisyllabic infinitives would be dissyllabic. It was evident too that a great deal of the vocabulary to be investigated was obscure. One had to deal with words that were according to every probability very old, created according to a method dating back to the Merovingian period, and which were often not to be found in datable texts before their attestation in dialect dictionaries of the sixth century. One had therefore to expect that the original meanings of many such words would have become obscured and vague and that their forms would have been exposed to the ravages of analogy and popular etymology.

In dealing with this obscure vocabulary, I have proposed etymologies in the great majority of cases. For some words, however, that appear to belong to the class of verbs I have investigated, I have been unable to make any reasonable proposal. Among the numerous suggestions I have put forward, I am quite ready to believe that some will be rejected ; there are some about which I have myself some doubts. There is, however, a large residuum of words for which I think I have found the true explanation.

The results of my investigation of the parasynthetic verbs of form Germanic FIR-, FER- + Latin or Germanic root + infinitive termination, I should summarize briefly as follows :

- 1) The tendency to labialisation of the vowel of the prefix seen in four-, for- is further confirmed by the forms in fur-, feur-, see notes 71-75 and 114-125 ;

ii) On the other hand the persistence of forms containing the prefix without labialisation of its vowel are numerous. These forms continue FER-; in certain cases the opening action of the vibrant is seen in far-; in other cases metathesis gives fre-, fra-.

iii) Literary French appears to prefer the metathetic form fre-, in fredaine; fredonner and its derivatives; frelampier; frelater and its derivatives; frelоче; freluche; freluquet; fretiller; cf. also frelore, fretailleur, fretouiller. The O. Fr. forms ferarmer, fervestir, ferlier, fernoer no doubt owe their persisting FER- to influence from L. ferum and L. firmus.

iv) The fer-, far- forms occur in most dialects. They are rare in Walloon where for- is dominant; but even here we find ferlanguer by the side of furlanguer. So in Poitou where the metathetic forms are commonest, there occur fertalée and effarvoyai.

v) The forms of the prefix with initial v- are notable. Ver-, var- are relatively common. Such French words as verglas, vermiller, vermillonner, vermoulu appear to owe their v- in part to L. vitrum and L. vermis. That is also probably true of a word like vertigne properly "moth-eaten" by which is translated "worm-eaten" by Cotgrave. There remain, however, a number of forms with v- where the v- cannot be so explained. Very remarkable is alternation of fertoquer, ferdoquer (cf. also ferdochéne) with vertoquer; of such forms as vertiller by the side of fertiller, fretiller, of vertouiller by the side of fertouiller, fretouiller, of vertaupe, vertaupe (with influence of taupe) by the side of fertouper, of vernailler by the side of fernailleur; and of other forms like verdinguer, verdrecque, verhaule, verluter, vertaper and vertigné. Such forms suggest that even in the case of French verglas, vermiller, vermillonner, vermoulu, vertigné the influence of Latin words on the initial sound may be exaggerated, and it is possible that the alternation of f- and v- in the prefix fer-, ver- will have to be explained otherwise.

vi) The West and South West dialects (Poitou and Saintonge) have a preference for vre-, seen in vrelepinghe, vreliard, vrelopper, vreniller and vretacquer. An interesting point about these five words is that, if my explanations of their origin are sound, they are all of Germanic root. The existence of words of this formation in Poitou and Saintonge is the more to be noted because these are the farthest removed of the North French maritime provinces from the Germanic-speaking countries, so that we should expect weakening of Germanic influence earlier than in the more northerly coast districts. The five words quoted cannot but belong to the earliest period of borrowing. The fact that three of them have no counterpart in other dialects is further testimony to the very large number of verbs there must originally have been, that showed the type of formation discussed in this article.

vii) It is perhaps worth while to note how many verbs of the type here studied are attested in dialects with two, three or even four forms of the prefix : so fournailier, fernailier, frenailier and vernailier ; fourlaper, ferlaper and vrelepingue ; fornaquer, fournaquer, tournacher, feurnacher, fernaquer ; fretiller, fertiller and vertiller ; ferloupper, vertaube, vartaube (influence of taube) and many others for which I refer the reader to the vocabulary.

viii) One result of the investigation has been very remarkable. I have suggested a Latin root for a few of the forms here discussed and notably for ferpigné, fourmont, fretailier, fretouiller, verluter, vertigné and verzouleux. But the startling result is that I have been led to propose a Germanic root for some fifty different verbs or their derivatives. Some of these words belong to the normal vocabulary of Modern French : fredaine, fredonner, frelampier, frelater, freluche, freluche, freluquet, fretiller ; verglas, vermiller, vermillonner, vermoulu. A great many are only found in dialects. Of the latter, some are widely used over North France; others are limited to a small area. There are among them words which are found in a single work : vertaper given by Cotgrave in 1611, or frateler used in the Muse Normande.

ix) In a general way, the forms examined in this article are not attested early. So far as Old French is concerned, it is worth noting that ferarmer, ferlier, fernoer and fervestir occur in the Chansons de geste and are a testimony to their more popular character, for the aristocratic Breton poems do not contain any of the forms of the type I have examined. The following are attested before 1300 : fresiller and fretiller, verglas and vermoulu, vertoucher and vertouiller ; in the xivth century are found frefeil, ferloque, fortailier, vermiller, and vertoquer ; in the xvth ferluque and vuarlope ; in the xvth besides frelater and fretouiller, the four Western forms occurring in the works of Rabelais : vrelepingue, vrelopper, vereniller, vrelacquer ; in 1611 Cotgrave attests vertaper and vertigné. For very many forms, the first mention is to be found in dialect dictionaries, for the most part of the second half of the sixteenth century.

THE VOCABULARY

1. — O. Fr. aforsené "beside oneself".

One example God. 1, 150 : " Aforsené d'orgueil et de rage et de desloialté " (Godefroi de Buillon, Richel. 22.495, f° 10c).

2. — Lorraine anfernowè "securely knotted or tied".

See note 62 on old Fr. fernoer.

3. — Lorraine anfeurhalé "bearing a grudge".

SOURCE :

1924 Zéliqzon, Dict. des pat. rom. de la Moselle, 17 : " Anfeurhalé, adj. Qui a un grief contre quelqu'un ".

Anfeurhalé properly means by its etymology "having vengeance in (his heart)" as it contains the same word as the Dutch verhalen "to avenge".

4. — Lorraine anfeurnahieu.

See note 55 on Lorraine fèrnāhhe.

5. — Anjou défaufiler "to untack, to unbaste",

See note 82 on faufiler.

6. — Démuin défenouiller.

1893 A. Ledieu, Gloss. de Démuin, 60 : " Défenouiller. v. a. Enlever les mauvaises herbes ; — fig. débarrasser, débrouiller ".

See note 58 on *fernailler*³.

7. — Norm. déferlampé "torn, in bits".

SOURCE :

1876 Delboulle, Gloss. de la vallée d'Yères, 104 : " Déferlampé, adj. Déchiré, en lambeaux, en parlant des vêtements ".

See note 46 on ferlamper.

8. — Berry déferlicoter "to remove the halter from (e. g. a horse)".

How are we to explain deferlicoter = délicoter "débarrasser de son licou ” délier (ex. g. un cheval) ? Délicoter is due to dissimilation for délicoler. Déferlicoler suggests a lost verb ferlicoler.

9. — Picard, Angevin déferloquer.

SOURCES :

1880 Jouancoux, Études, etc., I, 272 : “ Déferloqué, déguenillé ”.

1908 Verrier et Onillon, Gloss. de l'Anjou, I, 271 : “ Déferloquer (Saint-Paul-du-Bois). v. a. Disloquer, ébranler, démolir, détraquer ; mettre en pièces ”.

In Anjou the word appears to have been influenced by disloquer ; the original meaning is the last given : “ to pull to bits ” from “ to reduce to rags ”.

See note 99 on freloquer.

10. — B. Maine défourniller.

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 144 : “ Défourniller, faire sortir d'un trou ou d'une cachette ; — chercher un objet au milieu d'autres qui le cachent ; — défricher ”.

See note 58 on *fernailler*³.

11. — B. Maine défournailier.

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 144 : “ Défournailier, tirer peu à peu d'une cachette ».

See note 58 on fernailler.

12. — Fr. éfaufiler “ to untack, to unbaste ”.

Acad. 1762. — 1st ex. in DG : 1701 Furetière, Dict.

See note 32 on faufiler.

13. — Berry, Poitou effarvoyer, Poitou effravoyer “ to frighten ”.

SOURCES :

1857 Jaubert, Gl. du Centre, II, 526 : “ Effarvoyer. v. a. effaroucher, fourvoyer ”.

1868 Lalanne, Gl. poitev., 119 : “ Effarvoyai. v. a. effaroucher : sans cesse tu effarvoyes mes poules. — v. pr. s'effarvoyai, s'envoler de frayeur. D[eux]-S[èvres], arr. de Chât. Effravoyé. v. a. effaroucher V[ienne], arr. de Chât. ”.

Effarvoyer des poules is equivalent to “ leur faire faire fausse route, les fourvoyer ”. The same formation occurs at Les Fourgs (Doubs) where according to Tissot, 122, 141, s'effourvai “ se fourvoyer ” is commoner than se fourvaï.

Some dialects have the analogical -ier for -oyer : Morvan forvier (Chambure, 371).

14. — Poitou effretillé.

SOURCE :

1867 Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 129 : “ Effretillé, ée (se prononce effr'tillé). Frétillant, alerte, B[eauchet]-F[illeau]. ”

See note 111 on frétiller.

15. — Middle French enfenouiller.

See note 58 on *fernailler*³.

16. — Maine, Anjou enfermailler.

See note 56 on *fernailler*¹.

17. — Anjou enfernailler.

See note 56 on *fernailler*¹.

18. — Mid. Fr. enforceler, enfourceler “ to hide ”.

God., III, 153 : 1^o c. 1378 Modus in La Curne : “ Enfourcelé et couvert de drap... ” where enfoucelé is a clear compound of fourceler ; but in 2^o 1593 Propos tenu entre le Roy de Fr. et le Card. : “ Ceux qui brouilloient pour la religion estoient enforcelez et enyrez de la Ligue... ”, enforcelez appears to be for enforcenez or ensorcelez. — Cf. also God., IV, 157 enforcillé.

19. — Anjou enfornailler.

See note 56 on *fernailler*¹.

20. — Old and Middle Fr. enforsener.

God., III, 156 has enforsener with three examples, one of the xiith cent. (Rom. de Troie), one of 1387 (Jean d'Arras, Mélusine) and one of 1582 (G. du Buys, Élégie à M. de Loquelan).

21. — Picard, Rouchi s'enfournaquer, “ to thrust oneself into, to be envelopped in ”, Mons einfournasquer “ to thrust in, to envelop, to put out of countenance ”.

See note 59 on Démuin fernaquer, etc.

22. — Rouchi enfourniquer.

See note 81 on Rennes founigoter, etc.

23. — Mid. Fr. enfourvoyer "to lead astray".

God., III, 157 has one example: "Afin que les mesdisans ne vous puissent enfourvoyer du contraire" (Perceforest, IV, 45c, éd. 1528).

24. — Picard enfoustaquer.

SOURCE :

1880 Jouancoux, Études du pat. picard, I, 217: "Ce mot... je le trouve dans les notes que m'adresse mon dévoué et savant collaborateur, M. Devauchelle, et ne puis mieux faire que copier: On dit être enfoustaqué, être préoccupé fortement; être hébété... D'où vient le radical foustaqué qu'il faut d'abord réduire à foustaq avant de lui trouver un père? Ce père est le verbe flamand voersteken, ficher en avant, que Plantin (1573) traduit par le mot latin præfigere...".

The connection must be, not with voersteken, but rather with versteken, perhaps in the sense of: "frustrer; débouter; repousser".

25. — Anjou s'évernailler.

SOURCE :

1908 Verrier et Onillon, Gl. de l'Anjou, I, 374: "S'évernailler v. réfl. Sortir d'une cachette, se montrer subitement. — Se secouer, se réveiller, faire montre d'énergie".

See note 58 on *fernailler*³.

26. — Anjou éverzillé "alert, of quick intelligence".

SOURCE :

1908 Verrier et Onillon, Gl. de l'Anjou, I, 374: "Everzillé. adj. Avisé. Ma petite est bien éverzillée".

See note 64 on fersiller, and particularly Rouchi verziller and Norm. vézillant.

27. — Picard fardaine.

See note 91 on fredaine.

28. — Farlaterie.

Ex. of 1609 from the Chronique bordelaise quoted by DG, s. v. frelaterie. See note 96 on FRELATER.

29. — Mons farlope.

See note 50 on ferloper, ferlouper.

30. — French farfouiller “to feel or fumble about, to rummage, to search (in a disorderly way)”.

DG, 1031 :

FARFOUILLER. v. intr. et tr.

Etym. Composé avec fouiller et une particule d'origine incertaine. — xv^e s. Elles furent farfouillées, RAB., iv, 36.

|| Famil. Fouiller au milieu des choses en les mêlant, en les brouillant.

GEW, 407 :

FARFOUILLER “durchstöbern, durchwühlen, 16. Jhdt., ist Kreuzung mit Gleichbedeutendem afrz. fatrouiller s. jatras; kaum assimiliert aus barfouiller* zu Lyon barfolhi “in einer Flüssigkeit herumwühlen” Horning, ZRP, xxii, 483; REW, 3404, dieses zusammengesetzt aus pejorativem bis-, s. balourd und fouiller; vgl. auch Regula, ZRP, xliii, 7.

No example of French farfouiller earlier than 1552 is known. But other examples of the xvth century there must have been, as is shown by an examination of Cotgrave's explanation of the word :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : “Farfouiller, to rifle, towse, crumple, berumple with rifling; to search disorderedly or untowardly; or to disorder by an untoward search; also to dabble, or puddle in the water, famble [i. e. fumble] in the durt, rake in the mire”.

Now the meanings given by Cotgrave might be arranged as follows : “(1) to fumble or mess about in dirt, in water, etc.; (2) to fumble or mess about, to disorder, to put in a mess (by an untoward search); (3) to crumple, berumple by fumbling or rifling; (4) to search untowardly or in a disorderly way”. And this leads to the suggestion that farfouiller is to be connected with Middle Dutch and Flemish vervuilen, vervulen translated in 1630 by “souiller, devenir ord et puant, putrifier, corrompre” (Den Schat der duytscher Tale); cf. E. Fris. fer-fulen “in Schmutz verkommen, über u. über, bz. durch u. durch schmutzig werden” (Doornkaat-Koolman), German verfaulen “to corrupt, to putrefy”. In this connection, it is interesting to compare the German verbs which translate farfouiller such as durchstänkern or durchstöbern.

The information obtainable from dialect dictionaries may be classed as follows :

1° something of the original meaning is preserved in the following cases :

1868 Lalanne, Gloss. poitevin, 133 : “ Farfoullae (ll mouillées) v. n. marcher dans la boue, dans un terrain humide... (cf. Limousin farfouillas... ; farfouillai v. n. faire du bruit : “ L'eau entrée dans les souliers farfouille, en marchant D[eux-S[èvres]... ”.

a. 1902 Guillemaut, Dict. pat. de la Bresse loubannaise, 123 : “ Farfouiller, fouiller de tous côtés, chercher en fouillant d'une manière désordonnée ; au fig. “ ça me farfouille dans l'estomac, ça remue : farfouiller, se dit d'un cheval qui boit un mélange d'eau et de farine. Farfouillon, mélange où l'on farfouille, breuvage pour le cheval, d'eau et de farine ”.

1884 Mistral, Trésor, I, 1165 : “ Fourfouia, farfouia (lang.), fourfoulha, (dauph.) forfoulha, farfouiller, fouiller désordonnément, remuer, s'agiter, barboter, gargouiller ; commencer à bouillir, bouillir avec bruit ”.

2° As a general rule the dialect dictionaries that quote farfouiller assign to it the meaning it has in written French or meanings that diverge but slightly : the most interesting case is that of Lorraine fairfouyi “ gâcher l'ouvrage ” given for the village of Allain by Adam, Les Patois lorrains (1881), 251. But one meaning assigned to farfouiller occurs over a considerable area :

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 202 : “ Farfoulier, barbouiller en parlant du langage, bredouiller, balbutier ”.

1856 Sigart, Gloss. montois, 174 : “ Fafier, farfeyer. v. n. parler comme les personnes en état d'ivresse, ou comme les apoplectiques dont la langue est paralysée d'un côté ;... farfeyer, tripoter, farfouiller ”.

1867 Vermesse, Dict. du pat. de la Flandre franç., 238 : “ Farfouiller, v. n. comme en français ; nous l'employons en outre dans le sens de bredouiller ”.

1881 Adam, Les Patois lorrains, 251 : “ Farfouié, parler indistinctement (St Amé] ”.

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 197 : “ Farfouiller, bégayer ”.

For the transference of the sense from “ to fumble or mess about in water ” to “ to speak indistinctly ”, we can quote the French barboter which has both meanings and refer to various other cases collected by Sainéan, Sources indigènes de l'étymologie française, I, 224 sq. What appears important is to account for the fact that the word occurs in Spain where it cannot be explained as borrowed from French as the meanings given for Spanish are not attested in written French :

1776 F. Cormon, Sobrino Aumentado, II, 7 : “ Farfallosa, sa. adj. Bredouilleur, euse, celui qui bredouille, qu'on ne peut entendre parce qu'il parle mal, ou trop vite ”... Farfulla. s. m. Celui qui bredouille, qui parle vite, qui bégaie... Far- fullador . . . Farfullar v. a. bégayer, bredouiller, parler avec difficulté ou trop vite, ne pas articuler ses mots. Farfullar, faire quelque chose à la hâte, avec confusion ”.

Cf. for the dialects of North Spain : Catal. farfoll, farfallós “ tartamudo ” (Saura, 168), Arag. farfolloso “ tartamudo, balbuciente, tartajoso ” (Borao, 171), Astur. farfullar “ gaguear, hablar sin claridad, comiéndose las palabras o empleándolas mal ó faltando á la verdad ” (Rato y Hevia, 59), Galic. farfullas (com.) “ Que habla balbuciente y de prisa, (com. fam.) que obra atropelladamente ” (Valladares Nuñez, 243). Before 1776 I do not find the meaning “ to stutter ” ; in 1706 Stevens, in his Spanish-English Dictionary, translates farfullar by “ to prate, to babble, to talk hastily, to chatter ” ; and in 1627 Minsheu, in his Vocabularium Hispanico-Latinum, has farfullar “ hablar muy apriesa ” and refers to Covarrubias :

1611 Covarrubias, Parte Secunda del Tesoro, ed. 1673, 5 : “ Farfullar, hablar muy apriesa y atropelladamente . . . ”.

As I have said, these Spanish words cannot be taken from French nor is it admissible that they were borrowed from dialects in districts where Spain was politically powerful in the xvith century (e. g. Franche-Comté, Belgium). We have indeed to note that (a) South French fourfouia, farfouia (see above), (b) South French farfaia, Rouergue farfalha “ bredouiller ” (Mistral, Trésor, I, 1099) establish a continuity between the Spanish forms and those of Northern France. But it cannot be denied that the Spanish forms offer a very strong objection to the etymology I have suggested, unless it can be shown that they derive from French. For in no other case discussed in these notes, can it be said that the North French words have their counterparts in Spain or even in Southern France. The only alternative is to accept the etymology : far + fouiller.

21. — Boulogne-sur-Mer farsinguer and the meaning and origin of O. F. fressange, fressanger.

ML, 3519 FRISING “ junges Schwein ”. Afrz fressange (> amail. fresinga, siz. frisinga), prov. fraisenga, Diez, Wb., 589 ; Fr. St., VI, 99 ; ZRPb, XXXIV, 206 (sehr zweifelhaft, auch wegen des Geschlechtes ; frisking ist lautlich kaum möglich). —

I am inclined to think that the information on the meaning of O. Fr. fressange which has been available to etymologists is doubtful and insufficient,

God., IV, 143 explains fressange (variants : fresange, frecenge, fressonge, frissingue) by : " redevance annuelle d'un cochon de lait, droit dû au seigneur par ceux qui avaient des porcs dans l'étendue de la seigneurie et qui les faisaient paître dans la forêt ou dans les bois particuliers au temps de la glandée ; et aussi droit dû en certains lieux par les fermiers de la glandée aux maîtres des eaux et forêts " ; and he gives the following as the earliest instance of this name of a feudal due :

1184 Arch. Vienne, Trinité : " Insuper occasione frecenge quam ipsi de suo solvere debent abbatisse ad natale Domini ".

Neither from this nor from any of the later examples given by God., and dated 1277, 1328, 1364, 1375, 1398, 1451, does one get any definite information on the exact nature of this feudal due. It is from a charter of as late a date as 1553 that we get a definite statement. Further God. has two other articles : (a) fressangage " droit dû par les fermiers de la glandée qu'on payait en porc frais, et souvent en argent " for which he quotes six texts of the xivth century ; (b) fressangée s. f. " droit qu'on payait en porc frais ou jeune et souvent en argent ", for which he quotes a Paris text of 1301. None of the texts quoted for fressangage or fressangée are more illuminating than the medieval texts quoted for fressange. God. gives also : (a) fressange " jeune porc " with two texts, one of 1393 and one of 1507, to which I shall again refer, and (b) fressin " jeune pourceau " with a single but valuable quotation :

1458 Arch. JJ 187, pièce 250 : " Le suppliant et icellui fillastre trouverent une truye avec trois ou quatre pourceaux appelez fressin ".

If fressin is " the young pig ", it is at once suggested that fressange in the text of 1393 quoted by God. is the " young sow " (art. fressange " jeune porc ") :

1393 Arch. Loiret, Aveu de la gruerie de la Seichebriere, ap. Le Clerc de Douy, I, 256 r^o : " Il peut tuer la plus belle fressange de la porcherie ".

This is confirmed by the only dialect dictionary which, to my knowledge, mentions our word :

1903 Haigneré, Vocab. du pat. boulonnais, 261 : " Farsingue s. f. jeune cochon femelle ".

A further confirmation is derived from a manuscript vocabulary of the speech of Erquinghem-sur-la-Lys which I compiled during the winter of 1914-5 and from which I extract the following :

“ Feursinque, s. f. 1. femelle châtrée du cochon, du lapin ; 2. femme stérile ”.

Is the O. F. fressange in principle a substantive derived from a verb of Germanic origin corresponding to :

Dutch verzenghen “ door zenghen lichtelijk branden, bederven, schroeien, beschadigen ” ?

Cf. 1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : “ Verzenghen, havir, brusler aucunement : verzengen het verckens hayr, brusler ou eschauder la soye des pourceaux ”.

Cf. German versengen, also sengen in ein Schwein sengen “ flamber un cochon ” ; Engl. to singe.

The text of 1507 given by God., s. v. fressange “ jeune porc ” :

1507 Cout. loc. du baill. d'Amiens, éd. Bouthors, Prév. de Beauquesne, ii, 264 : “ Et s'ils tuent frissingue, pour mettre en estal, ils seront tenus de les bruler ”, is to be understood as meaning that “ if any one kill a young sow to offer it for sale, he is bound first to burn off or singe off the bristles ”. When the bristles are to be removed from a young pig or sow, they are often first dipped into boiling water and this is called in French échauder (e.g. un cochon de lait), cf. hurler comme une truie échaudée in Rolland, Fa. Pop., v, 231.

It will be noted that if the O. F. fressange is derived from a verb borrowed from Germanic and more particularly from Frankish FER-SENGAN* (cf. O. Fris. senga, A. Sax. sengan) the s will remain surd in all the French dialects and the alternation of ss and s in both the French (fressange, fresange, frecenge) and the North-Eastern (fressin, farsingue, feursinque) forms — ss between vowels being a graphic device to indicate the surd spirant — would be explained.

There would remain, however, various points that require elucidation :

(i) what was in principle the feudal due called fressange ? By the xvth century the original form of payment had suffered many changes ; in certain parts of the country the system of paying in kind still survived in some form or another, witness Cotgrave's article the source of which was probably a legal text :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : “ Fresange. One hog, or more, due to the master of the waters, and forrest of Aubigny (and elsewhere) by the farmers of the masting, and broustage thereof ”, but in many places it had been compounded for a fixed money due.

(ii) Considering the information from Erquinghem-sur-la-Lys given above, was the young sow called fressange castrated so as to make it unfit for reproduction and to allow it to be fattened for alimentary purposes? There are two methods of castration. A verb derived from a Frankish *FER-SENGAN could only refer at first to castration by burning. God., IV, 143 has another article :

FRESSANGÉE 2. — adj. f. — Pleine (en parlant d'une truie) [TEXT. 1398 Charte, La Cour Dieu, Arch. Loiret : " Une truie fressangée "].

What we have already said is all against God.'s explanation of *fressangée*² ; but the importance of the text he quotes lies in the fact that it proves the existence of an Old Fr. verb fressanger, probably derived from Frankish FER-SENGAN and meaning " to scald (in order to remove bristles or in order to remove the organs of reproduction) ". It is this verb fressanger which appears to me decisive against the etymology by means of O. H. G. friscing (friuscing, fruscing) " Opfertier ", Mid. H. G. vrishinc, vrishlinc " junges Tier, das sich von der Mutter getrennt hat ", cf. Mod. German Frischling " junges Wildschwein "; for, apart from the question of phonetic difficulties, and the absence of equivalent forms in the Dutch and Flemish dialects, such an etymology requires that fressanger be derived from fressange; fressanger would then be intransitive and would mean " to bear or give forth young " like vêler from veau, faonner from faon and so forth; whereas the passive use in une truie fressangée of 1398 implies a transitive fressanger une truie.

(iii) What is to be made of the following information ?

1903 Haigneré, Vocab. du pat. boulonnais, 261 : " Farsinguer v. a. Fendre, déchirer dans le sens vertical. J'ai farsingué men patalon ; al a farsingué se robe ".

The relation of Boulogne farsinguer with Boulogne farsingue seems certain, so that farsinguer is the equivalent of O. Fr. fressanger. Can we suppose that the verbal meaning " to castrate by burning " (verzenghen) was generalised so as to include " to castrate by cutting " (versnijden), so that it could in jest be applied to the cutting or tearing of clothes on the lower part of the body?

32. — Fr. faufiler " to baste ".

For O. Fr. forfiler, fourfiler in which for-, four- is the Germanic prefix and not L. foris.

33. — Picard faustriquer " to cheat at games ", festriller
 " id. ", fustiker " id. ".

Among the authors of French dialect dictionaries, Jouancoux stands out for the value of his etymological suggestions, for his judicious observations and for the dated examples that he quotes in support of dialectal words ; and it is a matter for regret that his Études pour un glossaire étymologique du patois picard (1880 vol. I, A-F ; 1890 vol. II, G-M) have not been completed.

This is how he deals with faustriquer (Études, I, 266) :

" FAUSTRIQUER, tromper au jeu. Ce mot vient du flamand valstrik, piège, trébuchet, par la diphthongaison ordinaire de al en au. C'est l'histoire d'attraper venu de trappe. On trouve dans le Dictionnaire de Genève (1704) le substantif fallstrick, piège, en latin laqueus. Il est remarquable que le picard seul ait tiré un verbe de ce mot, tandis que le flamand et l'allemand se sont tenus au substantif. Notre verbe constitue une de ces jolies métaphores qu'on rencontre presque aussi nombreuses dans les patois que dans la langue classique "

It is likely that the word faustriquer is to be explained in a different way. We have the following information from other sources :

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi., 204 : " Faustrie. s. f. tromperie, tricherie. Faustrielle à Maubeuge. Faire del faustrie, tricher. Faustrier. v. n. employé à Maubeuge pour tricher au jeu. Faustrieux, tricheur, trompeur. M. Quivy écrit avec les ll mouillées "

1851 Corblet, Gloss. picard, 456 : Faustin (Artois). Déloyauté. — Faustriker. Tricher au jeu. — A Maubeuge, faustrier. — Du roman foutriquet, tricherie. Dans l'Artois faustiner a le sens plus général de " agir avec déloyauté ". Juer al faustril. Même signification. — 457 : " Festriller, tricher au jeu, — Voyez faustriker ". — 470 : " Fustiker, Tromper au jeu ". — 1866 Sigart, Gl. montois, 175 : " Faustrie, s. f. tromperie, fraude, chose artificielle ". — 1903 Haigneré, Le patois boulonnais, 262 : Faustillard s. m. qui a l'habitude de faustiller. Deseille écrit d'après le patois de la ville faustigner. — Faustiller v. n. Tromper au jeu, tricher... "

In the Dutch and Flemish dialects valstrik is used of a snare for catching animals. No verb is derived from this noun, but the place of such a verb is taken by verstricken ; cf. 1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : " valstrick, un piège m., un trébuchet m., verstricken, prendre aux lacs, enlacer " ; cf. also German fall-strick, verstricken. In the dialect of Picardy one expects from verstricken a form festriquer (see note on Mons festéquer), and from valstrik another form falstric, faustri, originally perhaps masculine, but influenced later by the suffix -erie in tromperie, tricherie, etc. From the substantive faustri, faustrie we get the verb faustrier, faustriller (influence of suffix -iller, cf. analogical depalatalisation in the Picard faustril, Maubeuge faustrile), faustiller, faustigner (whence Artois faustin).

We may then say that the Germanic verstricken must have given a verb festriquer, and that the attested Picard forms faustriquer, festriller, while they show the influence of the forms derived from valstrik, at the same time afford a proof of the existence of festriquer in the past.

So that properly speaking the Picard faustriquer is not derived from valstrik, though it has felt its influence; it is derived from a form equivalent to verstricken.

It is possible that the following text :

1425 Bibl. d'Amiens, La Fons, Gl. MS, in God. : " Sur une question regardant les Lombars tenant fastrie à Lille, lesquelz Lombars se voulirent exempter de non sortir jurisdiction par devant eschevins de Lille... " contains our word, for God.'s explanation of fastrie by " boutique " is based on the text itself and has no other backing ; whereas fastrie can be compared with Walloon forms of Hécart's faustrie :

1866 Forir, Dict. liégeois-français, I, 356 : " Fâstiné, feindre, simuler, faire semblant... Fâstinech... Fâstinnrèie... Fâstineu... Fâstrèie, duplicité, hypocrisie, dissimulation ; perfidie, déloyauté, tartuferie " so that tenir fastrie of 1425 may well mean " to use their traps, their wily tricks, their hypocritical methods " and be used in this unfavourable way of the Lombards.

Moisy, Dict. norm., 283 explains "fénoc. s. m. tout objet qui forme obstacle, empêchement ; branchages, débris accumulés de toute nature qui entravent, embarrassent ou arrêtent ". In the text of 1554 fénoc is the "prickle of a thorn" and so corresponds in meaning with B.-Maine naqueron " piquant de ronce, de rosier, d'épine, arête de poisson " (Dottin, 364), H.-Maine nacron " épine crochue de ronce, de rosier " (Montesson, 333), and that raises the question as to whether fénoc is not derived from a lost verb fernoquer analogous to fernaquer, fournaquer (note 59) and fourniquier (note 81). For Germanic SNOKK-, NOKK-, by the side of SNAKK-, NAKK-, and SNIKK-, NIKK-, cf. p. 245.

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : " Nocke, l'eschine, nocke, nockinghe, hick, le hocquet ou sanglot ; nocke, kerjken in den pijl, le cren en la flesche ; snoek, hochet, hocquet, sanglout ; snocken, nocken, sanglouter ".

Cf. also naval German nock = Dutch nok " het uiterste end (van de ree) " 1681 Winschooten, Seeman, 166 with which Kluge, Seemannsprache, 588 compares Bavar., Tyrol. nock " Bergspitze ".

Among the forms in the French dialects which appear to be closely connected, some require a clearer explanation of semantic development than I can provide ; such are Norm. noque " flèche de voiture " (Duméril, 163), and Poitev. noqueter " s'arrêter, rester court " (Lalanne, 195). On the other hand Pays de Bray noque " brèche à un taillant, légère entaille à un bâton comme font les boulangers pour tenir note des pains qu'ils fournissent " (Decorde, 105), for which cf. Central French oche for noche whence English notch by the side of nock, may be put side by side with O. Fr. niquet " notch " ; and it may be noted that Jaubert, Glossaire du Centre, ii, 108 gives noqueter " souffler et claquer des dents " as well as naqueter " claquer des dents ".

38. — O. French ferarmer, ferlier, fernoer, fervestir.

These Old French words are generally supposed to be compounds of fer (L. ferrum) and the verbs armer, lier, noer, vestir. God. translates se ferarmer by "se revêtir d'une armure de fer"; E. G. R. Waters, the editor of the Voyage de S. Brendan (1928) explains ferlier by "bind with irons, enchain". And so on. It is suggested that these words are compounds of the type represented by L. manutenerē, cf. Fr. maintenir not maintenir, showing the continued influence of main as a separate element. The Traité de la formation de la langue française which serves as an Introduction to the DG, on p. 87 quotes as examples of such formations in French billebarrer, blanc poudré, boursoufler, bousculer, caillebotter, champlever, chantourner, houspiller, morfondre, saupoudrer, vermoulu. It is sufficient here to call attention to the doubtful origin and to the recent attestation of many of these words. With one of them, vermoulu, I deal in note 149; cf. also verglacer, note 139.

Ferarmer, ferlier, fernoer, fervestir even in Old French are archaic and rarish words. In God. fernoer is attested once; neither ferarmer nor ferlier nor fernoer are attested after 1250; fervestir which is in Old French particularly common in the fixed fervestir et armer of the epics is found very rarely after the Old French period, and only in the past participles fervesti, fervestu which are still noted by Cotgrave.

In an article in Romania, xl, 325, reprinted in his Étymologies wallonnes et francaises (1923), 94-95, J. Haust has attempted to show that two of these verbs ferlier and fernoer were compounds of O. Fr. ferm, fer (L. firmus) and the verbs lier and noer respectively. A. Thomas, in Romania, xl, 326, while entirely approving this explanation, called attention to one case of fierloier (Alexandre, éd. Michelant, f° 26) which seemed to show that the first element of the compound was the L. ferrum. Now I think it is certain that by what is called popular etymology the fer of these verbs was identified now with fer (L. firmus), now with fer L. (ferrum). Thus in S^t Brendan, éd. Waters, 1369 the editor gives the reading: iloces sui tost ferliez; but mss. B and E have ferm liez and ferm lijes. So again such forms as fierloier and fiervestir show the influence of fer from L. ferrum.

I have come to believe that the O. French ferarmer, ferlier, fernoer, fervestir are really, in their origin, compounds of a Germanic prefix and a Latin verb. Forms like the firbanniti, fërbanniti, ferbattudo of Merovingian charters suggest that the Franks in adopting Latin as their speech, not only latinised Germanic compounds (ferbanniti), but introduced into their Latin speech compounds of a very common Germanic prefix with a Latin verb. Thus words which correspond to Modern Dutch verwapenen, verbinden, verknoopen, verkleeden were rendered as FER-ARMARE, FER-LIGARE, FER-NODARE, FER-VESTIRE (cf. O. Fr. forardoir, forbatre, forconseiller, etc.). Such forms are not only earlier than A. D. 750 but probably much earlier. The interference, by popular etymology, of words like L. ferrum came firstly from the Gallo-Romans, and then from the newcomers but only as they lost contact with Germanic speech (cf. ferrobatudo of the Formulae Turonenses).

39. — Moselle fèrbayi “ to misdeal at cards ”.

Fèrbayi, forbèyeu is a compound of the verb = Fr. bailler “ to give ”; cf. for the meaning similar compounds of carter and donner: Valenciennes fourcarter “ donner mal les cartes ” (Hécart, 215), Mons fourcarter “ donner mal en cartant ” (Sigart, 184), Valenciennes fourdonner “ donner mal les cartes ”, fourdonne “ maldonne ” (Hécart, 215), Liège fordiné “ mal donner, au jeu de cartes ” (Forir, i, 387); cf. also Liège forzârdé “ mal donner ”.

See also note 164 on virbouillon.

41. — Gaumet ferdailli “ to strike hard at random ”;

Jura fredaller “ to wear out with slight touches ”.

SOURCE for ferdailli :

1897 Liégeois, Lex. du pat. gaumet, in Bull. de la Soc. liégeoise de litt. wal- lonne, xxxvii, 328 : “ Ferdailli. v. intr. Frapper à grands coups sans but bien précis, gauler ”.

If fer- is the Germanic prefix, what is the second element of the compound ?

It is not the same word as Old Prov. dalbar, dial. French dailler “ faucher ” which does not seem in E. France to occur further north than Mâcon (FEW, iii, 3) and the Jura (dailli, Monnier, 2^e Suppl., 305), and so would appear to be of Southern origin; the meanings attested for Savoy dailli “ 1^o faucher; 2^o marcher en fauchant (de l’homme et du cheval), c’est-à-dire en avançant le pied et en lui faisant décrire un demi-cercle; 3^o (at Albertville) marcher vite ” have induced FEW, iii, 3, to include under the same root-word Sancerre dailler “ sauter, gambader (des animaux); chasser, pourchasser ”, Le Puisaye (Yonne) dailler “ s’enfuir, courir d’une manière folle (des bêtes à cornes piquées par les taons) ”, but the Sancerre et Le Puisaye words are to be connected with a Northern group and cannot be separated from Morvan dâler “ aller de côté et d’autre, flâner; se sauver précipitamment, en parlant des animaux. Les bêtes à cornes dâlent lorsqu’elles s’enfuient de frayeur en ruant et en dressant la queue en l’air ” (Chambure, 237).

I do not agree with the arrangement of the North French words containing DAL-, DAILL- given by FEW, iii, 7. These words are in my opinion derived from Frankish, and in the brief explanation of my view given below, the Frankish words are represented by the equivalent Middle Dutch and Flemish forms, and failing such by the equivalent forms in some other Low German dialect :

I. — A. — Middle Dutch DAL “ dale, valley ”. — Liège dal “ vallon, petite vallée, espace de terre entre deux côteaues ” (Forir, i, 205); Norman dalle “ vallée ” (Moisy, 179); Norman place-names like Dieppedale, etc., are Frankish (Dieppedale cannot represent O. N. djúpr and dalr).

B. — Low German DAL “ pipe ” properly “ place where is running of water ” (cf. meanings of German Pinne); eventually the same word as DAL “ dale, valley ”. — O. and Middle French dale “ sewer, sink ” and generally speaking all the words given in FEW, iii, 4 art. ON. dâela “ rinne ” under 1^o.

N. B. — FEW’s argument that these words are from O. Norse because they are first attested in Norman texts is unconvincing. Norman is particularly rich in old texts; further naval terms like dalot "scupper" naturally occur in texts from the coast; and in any case the occurrence of the words and forms in question in Picardy and elsewhere outside Normandy seems decisive against O. Norse origin.

II. — Middle Dutch DALEN (from DAL) "to go down, to descend, to sink" (cf. Middle Dutch dellen "to go down" from delle "valley", also Fr. aval, dévaler from val). — Walloon daler "aller", Mons daller, s'aindaller "s'en aller" (Sigart, 139); Flandre Franç. daller "aller, s'en aller" (Vermesse, 180); Rouchi, Picard s'endaler "s'en aller"; Auvergne se dala "descendre" (Chambure, 237); cf. Rouchi mète à dalache "mettre en train" (Hécart, 142), Mons dallage "en train, en marche, en danse" (Sigart, 139) with Mons aday "exercer, former; mettre en train", Perwez s'adayi "se mettre à faire quelque chose", Namur s'adayi, Stavelot adayeter, Vielsalm adayeti "accourir à toutes jambes", and for this last meaning, cf. Morvan dâler, Sancerre, Le Puisaye dailler quoted above. All these words should be separated from the others grouped by FEW, iii, 6-7 under German dahlen "tändeln".

III. — Middle Dutch DEL "part, portion, share, etc.". — 1° Norm. delle "groupe de pièces en labour"; dellage "région d'une plaine en labour, où les pièces ont leurs sillons tracés dans le même sens et aboutissent le plus souvent à un chemin d'exploitation commun".

2° Middle Fr. dalle "slice of big fish" but not the other words given in FEW, iii, 5 art. O. Norse dâela "rinne" under 2°.

N.B. — Fr. dalle de saumon is used before 1380 by G. Tirel, the king's chef, who had been in one or another of the households of the royal family from the age of about twelve (1326). When Borel in 1655 says: "Dale ou dele, c'est-à-dire en Normandie une tranche..." it is because the word as applied to big sea fish — dalle de cabillaud, de bar — would naturally be found particularly in the coast provinces.

IV. — Middle Dutch DELEN "to divide, to share, etc.", VERDELEN "id.". — See note 71 on Morvan feurdale.

V. — Middle Dutche DELE (Dutch deel. — Cf. 1630 Den Schat der duytschen Tale: "deele, dele, planche, bois de fente, membrure de sciage, aussi un pavé"). — Walloon dalle "planche mince de sapin ou autre bois blanc" (Grandgagnage, i, 162); Walloon dél "din; roche sur laquelle la mine repose; celle qui est au-dessus de la couche s'appelle le toit" (Grandgagnage, i, 164, 347 and ii, xx). — French dalle "flagstone", daller "to pave with flags" and the words given by FEW, iii, 5, art. O. Norse dåela "rinne" under 2° (first two paragraphs).

V. — Dutch DALJEN (also dalijen, dalgen) "op eene of andere wijze verliefd aanraken (door zachte klagjes te geven)", considered by Knüttel, Woordenboek d. nederl. Taal, iii², 2257 as probably the same word as E. Fris. daljen, daljen "hauen, schlagen, prügeln", dördaljen "durchhauen, durchprügeln" (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb., i, 275); cf. L. Germ. daljen, dalgen "hauen, schlagen, prügeln", also dial. H. German dalgen, talken "prügeln", German talgen "kneten".

The following words may be arranged under this heading :

1° Engl. to dally "1° : to play, or wanton as in interchanging caresses, 2° : to trifle away time, loiter, delay"; Mid. Engl. dalien, generally supposed and I think rightly to derive from A. Norm. tri-syllabic dalier "to play, to trifle", cf. A. Norm. s'entredalier "s'entrerêjouir" (God., iii, 284); the A. Norm. forms occur in the texts of the xiith century but no corresponding forms occur in Old Fr. texts of the continent. This has led FEW to suppose that the Anglo-Norm. words were derived from English; but borrowing from English in early A. Norm. is very rare.

2° On the other hand, some dialects of the Continent appear to keep the same word in special senses, see FEW, iii, 6-7, particularly those of the Meuse and Moselle, e. g. Meuse dailli "dire des sornettes aux portes et aux fenêtres des maisons le soir en contrefaisant la voix", etc.

3° The meaning "to strike" is attested in A. Norm. in the early xivth century :

C. 1310 Pierre de Langtoft, Chron., Rolls Series, ii, 246 : "Ke nesun de tuz al fet valt une maylle, For (s) Patrick de Graham, ke demourt et daille Del espé furbie, mes tuez est sans faille".

The same meaning seems to me quite possible in the Old Walloon text given by God. who translates by "railler":

a. 1449 J. de Stavelot, Chron., éd. Borgnet, 365 : "Anchois que ons asseist nulles des grosses bombardes, vinrent des jovenes compangnons liegeois, raides et legiers comme chiers et commençont tout jouwant a dallier cheaux qui estoient a bollewerque, et a traire et a lanchier".

Here is no doubt to be mentioned adayer "to provoke, to incense, urge, egge, stir up, move unto wrath" given as Picard by Cotgrave (1611); cf. Walloon daler "importuner" (Grandgagnage, Dict., ii, 519); also Walloon daie "coup violent, coup dangereux" (Grandgagnage, Dict., i, 162). Here also should be placed Gaumet ferdailli.

Here too I should put Jura fredaller :

1857 Monnier, Vocab. de la Séquanie, 332 : "Fredaller, v. a. User par le frôlement, comme on gâte une robe par le frou-frou (Arlay)".

The sense of "user" at once suggests the Germanic prefix we are discussing here. The idea of "gentle touch" is inherent in the Dutch daljen, as can be seen in the definition given by Knüttel.

42. — Gaumet ferdochène.

1897 E. Liégeois, Compl. du lex. Gaumet, in Bull. de la Soc. liégeoise de litt. wallonne, xli, 157 : "Ferdochène, n. f. C'est ti qui pay'rès la fèrdôchène. C'est toi qui payeras les pots cassés".

The root is probably that of Mid. Dutch docken "dare pugnoscere, ingerere verbera", Mid. Flem. docken "frapper, battre, férir". La ferdochène would be "what is smashed up by blows".

43. — Middle French (Valenciennes) ferfel.

See note 93 on frefel.

44. — N. Eastern fergard.

See note 77 on flégard.

45. — Valenciennes fergu "pleased".

SOURCE :

1834 Hécart, Dict. Rouchi, 205 : "Fergu, joyeux. Il étôt tout fergu d'eune telle rechette".

It is difficult not to admit connection with the past participle of Dutch vernoeghen "to satisfy" i. e. vergenoegd (cf. German vergnügt). Den Schat der duytscher Tale, in 1630, gives vernoeghen and vernueghen "satisfaire". Fergu seems to correspond to the past participle vergenuegt with loss of the n, due to clashing with g, g + n being rare in popular speech.

46. — E. Norm. ferlamper "boire comme un ivrogne", Picard ferlamper "boire avec avidité".

For these verbs, also Yonne ferlampe "association de buveurs et de débauchés", Norm. and Pic. ferlampier "drunkard", French frelampier "ruffian; poor wretch, beggar, cadger", Boulogne ferlampes "matières diverses, filaments albumineux qui flottent dans un liquide", see Miscellanea Lexicographica, iv, 7.

47. — Walloon (Liège) ferlanguer "to squander, to fritter away".

SOURCES :

1823 L. Remacle, Dict. wallon et franç., 152 : "Furlangué. s. m. prodigalité. — Furlanguéu, adj. s. prodigue, dissipateur. — Furlangué, v. a. Dissiper, prodiguer, dilapider, gaspiller.

[In the 2nd edition, these words practically disappear, for although in vol. I, p. 686 we find : "furlangué, furlanguéu. Voy. profané, profaneu, profaneur", there are no such articles as profané, etc., in vol. ii, p. 491].

[1866 H. Forir, Dict. liégeois-franç., i, 403 gives also furlangué "dissiper, prodiguer, consumer", furlanguéu, furlanguéu].

1845 Grandgagnage, Dict. étym. de la langue wallonne, I, 204 : "Ferlanguer, Remacle : furlang[u]er (prodiguer). Le simple lagan (largesse, profusion) se trouve dans Roquefort, Gloss. Nota : il est remarquable que languer soit deux fois parallèle à lozer : d'abord dans ferlanguer et forlozer qui sont synonymes, ensuite dans le Namur berlanguer = Liège berlozer".

It is clear that ferlanguer is not explainable by the usual senses of Dutch and Flemish verlangen or verlengen : cf. :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : "verlanghen, verlanghen hebben, avoir une attente ou désir après quelque chose, désirer affectueusement, affecter... verlanghen, lang maken, prolonger, différer... verlenghen, dilayer, allonger, prolonger, rallonger, faire long...".

But on the other hand it is clearly connected with Dutch and Flemish langen "to give" : cf. :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : "Langhen ende gheven, avaindre, atteindre, de handt langhen, tendre la main ; te drincken langhen, présenter à boire".

1730 Marin, Gr. Dict. holl.-franç., 510 : "Langen. v. a., Geeven. Donner, présenter. Zyn heer brood langhen, drinken langhen. Donner le pain, donner à boire à son maître", and we may suppose a verb verlanghen with the meaning "to consume, spend, squander, waste, lose, by giving away"; cf. from the Schat der duytschen Tale :

verdempen, despendre son bien en friandises ;
verdijsken, consommer à faire des dicques ou terraces ;
verleckeren, despendre son argent en friandises ;
verluyaerden, perdre par paresse ou négligence ;
verreysen, despendre à faire voyage ;
 etc.

48. — Picard ferlaper.

For Picard ferlaper " boire avec avidité ", ferlapeux " buveur, gourmand, dissipateur ", ferlape " langue ", ferlape " hanging bit of skin or cloth ", see my Miscellanea Lexicographica, iv, 7. Cf. Saint-Pol fourlaper (« usité à Nuncq » acc. to Edmont, Lexique Saint-Polois, 123).

49. — O. Fr. ferlier.

See note 38 on O. Fr. ferarmer, etc.

50. — Nth Eastern ferloper, ferlouper.

For Erquinghem f'rlouper " friper, franger ", f'rloupe, verloupe " dentelure, effilochage au bas d'une robe, d'un pantalon ", ferlopé " déchiré " in a text of 1624, Mons ferlopes, farlopes " marc, fèces qui se trouvent suspendues dans les liqueurs non clarifiées ", see my Misc. Lexic., iv, 7.

51. — Dialectal ferloquer, ferloque.

See note 99 on frelouper.

52. — Fr. Flanders ferlouper.

See note 50 on ferloper.

53. — Les Mauges fermailler.

See note 56 on fernailler.

54. — Jura fernaché.

See note 59 on fernaquer.

55. — Lorraine fèrnäbhe " zeal ", etc.

SOURCES :

1924 Zèliqzon, Dict. d. pat. rom. de la Moselle, 264 : " Fèrnäbhe, s. f. zèle. Voir feurnābhe. — Fèrnābiè. adj. Trop zélé. Voir feurnābieu". — Id., 267 : "Feurnāche, feurnābhe. s. f. 1^o zèle, empressement, précipitation. 2^o Folie, lubie, bêtise fredaine. — Feurnābieu. adj. Trop zélé. Voir anfournābieu". — Id., 283 : "For-; nāche, fornābhe. s. m. Qui s'emporte vite". — Id., 285 : "Fournābhe. s. f. zèle Voir feurnābhe". — Id., 17 : "Anfeurnābieu, 1^o v. tr. Tourmenter, faire endêver. Part. passé : qui s'emporte vite, endiablé, forcené, suppôt du diable. 2^o v. intr. être pressé, affairé, vouloir faire son ouvrage trop vite".

The -hb- of fèrnābhe, feurnābhe, fornābhe points to -sk- in the original, and the word is a verbal substantive of fernābieu (cf. anfeurnābieu), équivalent to Mons fournasquer (cf. einfournasquer) and the other forms discussed in note 59. Such senses of Dutch snakken as "flairer, aspirer, désirer fort" suggest an explanation of the special semantic development in Lorraine.

56. — Angevin *fernailler*¹ "to nail a boar's snout to prevent its rooting".

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine : "Enfermailler, ferrer le groin du porc... Enfromailler, ferrer le nez des porcs".

1906 Verrier et Onillon, Gloss. de l'Anjou, i, 341 : "Enfermailler (Craon, Ancenis). v. a. Mettre des pointes ou du fil de fer dans le groin d'un porc pour l'empêcher de fouiller la terre. Syn. de formailler. — Enfermailler un taureau, lui mettre une pince au nez. — Quelques-uns disent : enfermailler". — ... 342 : "Enformailler. v. a. le même que enfermailler"... 385 : "Fernailler. v. a. clouer le nez d'un porc pour l'empêcher de fouger. V. formailler"... 400 : "Formailler (Montjean) v. a. Planter des clous dans. Garnir de clous le groin d'un porc pour l'empêcher de fouger..."

The starting-point for all these forms is certainly fernailler. The word is derived from a Germanic form corresponding to Dutch and Flemish vernageln; cf. :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : "Vernaghelen, cloüer, vernaghelen een peert, enclouër un cheval; vernaghelen 'tgheschut, enclouër l'artillerie".

The forms with o seem to show the influence of forme. The influence of fermer is also discernible; cf. :

1912 H. Cormeau, Terroirs Mauges, i, 194 : "Fermailler, v. a. Placer des fils de fer, annelés aux bouts, dans les naseaux des taureaux et des verrats. Ces fermaux aident ensuite à se rendre maître de ces animaux quand ils se montrent difficiles à conduire".

57. — Berry *fernailler*², frenailler, fenailler, Picard fenailler "to whip, to thrash".

ML, 3252 *FERINARE "schlagen" has been introduced to explain

O. Fr. ferner and nothing else. Not only is *FERINARE hypothetical, but morphologically, as a derivative of FERIRE, it is unconvincing.

The meaning "frapper" is attributed by God. to O. French ferner attested in only two texts, the first in the Ju du Pelerin, ed. de Coussemaker, 416, the second in the following Picard text :

a. 1272 Rec. gén. des Jeux-partis français, SATF, i, 285 : "Ferri, nus ne doit ferner Chelui qui, pour avoir en sa baillie L'amour sa dame, a traïson bastie".

It appears possible to confirm the meaning given by God. by the following indications on a derivative of ferner in the modern dialects :

1856 Jaubert, Gloss. du Centre, i, 459 : "Frenailier, fernailier v. a. régenter de la main".

1903 H. Lapaire, Le patois berrichon, 65 : "Fenailier, fouetter".

1851 Corblet, Gloss. Picard, 456 : "Fenailier, battre violemment".

1893 Ledieu, Gloss. de Démuin, 96 : "Fenailier, v. a. battre violemment, donner une rossée, corriger les enfants indociles".

The importance of O. Fr. ferner is that it enables us to reject at once any explanation of dialectal frenailier, fernailier, fenailier by a Germanic compound verb of the type I have studied in this series.

It would be satisfactory to confirm the position of O. Fr. ferner by an etymological explanation. I am inclined to reject both L. ferire and L. frenum, the first on morphological, the second on semantic grounds; and to turn to L. fenum "hay" and identify O. Fr. ferner with O. Prov. fenar, O. Fr. fener, Mod. Fr. faner. The sense of "striking" would come from the blows given in cutting hay (cf. Fr. coup and couper; cf. Engl. hay from the root of A. Sax. beawian "to cut"; see also note on fretailier).

The introduction of an r into this verb occurs as far south as Lyon and Craponne : Craponne jarné "flétri, fané", Lyon farno, Panissières fërno "mûrir (en parlant des fruits dans le fruitier)"; this last meaning is to be explained by the fruit being left to ripen on hay or straw. One may also compare Anjou fenir "faner, se faner" (Verrier-Onillon, i, 384) with Poitou frenir "s'affaiblir, s'étioler" (Favre, 160), freni "dépérir (s'applique aussi bien aux personnes qu'aux choses)" (Lalanne, 140); Anjou défréner, défrener “ décliner, s'affaiblir, s'étioler, ne pas pousser, tomber en langueur de maladie ” (Verrier-Onillon, i, 272).

58. — Bresse louhannaise *fernailler*³, frenailler, fournailleur

“ to poke about, to fumble ”, Norm. frénailler, vernailler, etc.

The verb discussed in note 59 which occurs in the forms : Mons fournasquer, Rouchi, Flandre franç. fournagner, Picardy fernaquer, fornaquer, fournagner, Boulogne, Val d'Yères fournagner, Eure fournagner, fournager appears to be replaced in more southern parts of the country by forms in -ailler.

Thus to Eure fournagner, fournager “ fureter bruyamment ” one may compare : Norm. frénailler “ remuer des objets avec bruit, fureter, fouiller ” (Moisy, 306), “ faire un bruit irritant ” (Duméril, 109) ; B.-Maine furnailler “ rechercher avec bruit ” (Bierné) (Dottin, 211) ; cf. also Norm. vernailler “ remuer, faire du bruit ”, probablement une métathèse de frénailler (Duméril, 217), Anjou fernaillère “ ouverture longitudinale sur le côté ou au devant d'un cotillon et qui sert aux femmes pour certains soins intimes ” (Verrier-Onillon, i, 355) ; fournailleur “ activer le feu, surtout dans un four, tisonner ” (Verrier-Onillon, i, 404) ; cf. B.-Maine défournailleur “ tirer peu à peu d'une cachette ” (Dottin, 144) with Anjou s'évernailler “ sortir d'une cachette, se montrer subitement ; se secouer, se réveiller, faire montre d'énergie ” ; Poitou vernailler “ vétiller ” ; Bresse louhannaise fernailler, frenailler, fournailleur “ remuer comme dans un four, farfouiller ”. The attempt in some definitions to connect this word with four “ oven ” is merely popular etymology.

The close relation between the verb-forms in -asquer, -aquer, -aguer and those in -ailler is confirmed in my mind by the fact that to the more northerly words of the fourniquer, fourniguer type correspond forms in -iller : cf. B.-Maine ferniller “ remuer ” (Bierné) (Dottin, 198), fourniller “ fouiller, chercher ” (Olivet) (Dottin, 214), founiller “ fouiller, fureter en déplaçant maladroitement les objets ” (Dottin, 212), feuniller “ chercher partout ” (Dottin, 200) ; also Rennes founiller “ farfouiller ” (Coulabin, 169), Anjou (Segré) fourniller “ heurter, fureter ” (Verrier-Onillon, i, 404), Jura fourniller “ avoir la manie de chercher partout ” (Monnier, 332). Cf. also B.-Maine défourniller note 10 ; and also note 182 on vreniller.

There remains the question whether to the third form — fer-* noquer which I have postulated to explain the Norman fénoc “prickle of a thorn” (note 37) — corresponds a verb of the form fernouiller, frenouiller, fournouiller :

1611 Cotgrave : “Frenouiller. To fidder, to rake, to pudder ” [i. e. “farfouiller, fourgonner, patrouiller”].

Cotgrave gives frenouiller as a word from the Blois district and it survives there :

1892 Thibault, Gloss. du pays blaisois, 153 : “Fernouiller v. n. Fureter au milieu d’un tas d’objets qu’on remue confusément. — Remuer salement un liquide : Il fernouille dans la mase”. [Mase “mare d’eau”].

It is important to note that this form does not occur in the North, but in a Central belt : cf. :

1912 Cormeau, Terroirs Mauges, i (Gloss.), 194 : “Fernoyère n. f. Fente du jupon — synonyme de migaillère et plus fréquemment employé ; fente ménagée dans les blouses de chaque côté, à la hauteur des poches, et pour en permettre l’accès”. [Cf. fernaillère above, and Fr. fouillouse “poche”].

1878 Chambure, Gl. du Morvan, 369 : “Fornoiller, s. n. Se dit du ciel lorsqu’il se couvre de nuages, lorsqu’il s’obscurcit et prépare un changement de temps”. — This meaning is connected with the following : op. cit., 352 : “En feurnoïau, en tas, en monceau, se dit d’un lot de moutons qui, durant la chaleur, se réunissent obstinément en groupe”. — Cf. also op. cit., 376 : “Fournouilleu. s. m. Individu qui s’habille à la mode, personne fringante. . . ” which appears to be derived from fournouiller in the sense of “faire des embarras”.

According to Chambure, fernouiller means “frétiller” in the neighbourhood of Sens (Yonne), and Juret quotes for Pierrecourt (Haute-Saône) fāwñōyī “farfouiller”.

The original meaning would be “fureter”, then “farfouiller ; mettre en désordre, en tas ; embarrasser” and the two words ense-nouiller, défenouiller, which have possibly felt the action, by popular etymology, of fenouil, would be derived from it. — Enfenouiller is not in God. ; something of its history and its meanings can be gathered from the following :

1482 J. Molinet, Complainte pour le trespas de Madame Marie de Bourgogne, in P. Champion, Hist. poét. du XV^e s., ii, 352 : “Pauvres gens sont puis sa mort exillez, Royez, taillez, assommez, affaibliz,

Crocquez, chocquez, despouillez, desbillez,
Adonmagez, affamez, accueilliz,
Enfenoullez, essourdez, assailliz,

Honteux, honniz, passionnez, pugniz,
Matz, desconfiz, et meurdris bien souvent... ”.

1612 Béroalde de Verville, Moyen de parvenir : “ Ce jeune enfenouillé... ”.

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 176 : “ Enfenoulié. On appelle un homme qui paraît avoir beaucoup d'affaires, qui s'agite en tous sens, qui fait l'empressé : Monsieur l'enfenoulié. Il est ben enfenoulié. — Ête enfenoulié, être embarrassé soit au moral, soit au physique. Au moral, c'est ne savoir quel parti prendre ; au physique, c'est être dans la boue sans pouvoir s'en tirer... — Enfenoulier, embarrasser, mettre dans l'embarras ”.

1851 Corblet, Gloss. pic., 440 : “ Enfenouillié, qui a beaucoup d'affaires. — Enfenouiller, exciter, animer quelqu'un ”.

1915 L. Seurvât, Canchon d'guerre, 2^d ed., ii : “ Is ont enfenouillé nos plaines D'leus marmites et pis d'leus obus ”.

Cf. also :

1852 Decorde, Dict. du pat. de Bray, 76 : “ Enfenouillé, enveloppé, enfoncé dans : ex. : enfenouillez bien vos pieds dans le foin pour ne point avoir froid ”, with the sense of enfournaquer, enfourniquer. And for an attempt at connecting with fenouil :

1908 Verrier-Onillon, Gloss. de l'Anjou, i, 341 : “ Enfenouiller (Angers) v. a. Porter au cœur comme ferait l'odeur du fenouil. — “ Les radis, je les aime ben ; mais les bonbons, ça m'enfenouille ”.

For défenouiller, the source is :

1893 Ledieu, Gloss. de Démuin, 69 : “ Défenouiller, v. a., enlever les mauvaises herbes ; — fig., débarrasser, débrouiller ”.

Properly speaking the starting point is “ débarrasser, débrouiller ” ; and the sense of “ enlever les mauvaises herbes ” is merely a specialised application of “ débarrasser ” which should be compared to B.-Maine défouniller “ défricher ”.

59. — Démuin fernaquer, verduno-chalonnais feurnâcher, etc., “ to scent, to ferret out ”, etc.

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 216 : “ Fournaquer, fureter, remuer, mettre en désordre. Fournaquer au feu, c'est y toucher continuellement. M. Lorin dit que c'est un mot picard que le rouchi pourrait bien revendiquer, à cause de l'usage habituel qu'on en fait ”. — 176 : Ete enfournaqué, être fort enveloppé, être 1893 Martellière, Gloss. du Vendomois, 136 : “ Fournâcher v. n. Fourbancer, fureter, fourgonner ”.

1896 Richenet, Pat. du Petit-Noir (Jura), 139 : “ Fernâché, fourrager, chercher indiscrètement ”.

1896 Fertault, Dict. du lang. pop. verduno-chalonnais, 174 : “ Feurnâcher v. tr. farfouiller, fureter, sans trop savoir ce que l'on veut ”.

Of the forms here quoted the verb fernaquer, etc., is used in Hainault, in the departments of the Nord, the Pas-de-Calais, the Somme, the Seine-Inférieure and the Eure, then further south in the Loir-et-Cher, and again in the East in the Saône-et-Loire and the Jura. The meaning has suggested the influence of four (fourn-), of fourrer and of fouiller; with none of these words has it any connection. Up to a point its origin is certain: it cannot be separated fr. O. French naschier, nasquer “ to scent, to search or ferret out by the sense of smell ”, which survives in such forms as Walloon nagueler “ fureter, fouiller, remuer, agiter ” (Grandgagnage, ii, 152); Mons nakier, naker, nakter “ fureter, se mêler de tout, regarder à tout, faire comme les chiens qui cherchent leur proie ” (Sigart, 263); Rouchi naquer “ flairer, chercher en flairant, en parlant des animaux; se mêler de tout, regarder à tout, trouver à reprendre sur tout ” (Hécart, 317); Démuin naguer v. a. “ flairer, chercher en flairant, en parlant des animaux (fig.), se dit des personnes qui cherchent après quelque chose sans en avoir l'air ” (Ledieu, 169); Vallée d'Yères naguer v. a. et n. “ examiner curieusement, fureter de tous côtés comme un voleur ” (Delboulle, 239), etc. In the verb fernaquer, etc., not only have we a prefix fer- explained only by Germanic, but the root itself cannot be explained by a suppositious L. nasicare* (cf. ML, 5835 nasicare* “schnüffeln, schnuppen”), for the equivalent verb is not found in South France (see Mistral), and appears to be limited to the North-East of the country and to Belgium. With the simple verb naquer, naguer, etc., goes a substantive : Mons nak “odorat” (Sigart, 263), rouchi naque “odorat, réputation, renommée” (Hécart, 317), Fr. Flanders naque “odorat” (Vermesse, 346), Artois nake “piste”, Picard avoir bon nac “avoir bon nez” (Corblet, 546), etc. Particularly interesting is the following extract :

1867 Vermesse, Dict. du pat. de la Flandre française, 346 : “Avoir du nacque.. Avoir l'odorat très fin. J'cros qu'te cros que j n'ai pus d'nacque, a dit Brûle-maison. Malgré cette citation nous devons déclarer que, à Lille, on dit plus souvent dans le même sens : Avoir du snack”. — 468 : “Avoir du snack, loc. Avoir le nez fin, être rusé...” which leads me to compare the following Germanic forms :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : “Snack, respiration, haleine, abbay ; Snacken, appeler ou désirer fort ;... snic, snac, un hochet, soupir ou respiration ; den lesten snic, le dernier hochet ou souspir... ; snicken, suivre le trac ou la trace par l'odeur ; snicken, gloutir ; ... snock, hochet, hocquet, sanglout ; snocken, nocken, senglouter”.

The attested meanings, in the Dutch and Flemish dialects, of the verb snakken are as follows :

- (1) “sangloter, hoqueter” ;
- (2) “aspirer, désirer fort” ;
- (3) “happer” (cf. particularly W. Flem. snakken “haastig grijpen naar iets”, snakker “défense, lime, dague, croc, dent canine, dent laniaire” in De Bo, Westvlaamsch Idioticon, 910, 911 ; English to snack, « to bite, to snatch, to go shares », snack “bite ; snap, snatch of the jaws ; bit, fragment, portion” ; also to snatch) ;
- (4) “babiller” (cf. the name of snackaert given as a nickname to the French soldiers at Bruges in 1302 according to Franck-Van Wijk, Etym. Wdb., 629 ; also German schnik-schnak “verbiage, galimatias”).

The fundamental idea of the verb seems to be “to breathe (through the nose)” whence the sense of snikken “suivre le trac ou la trace par l'odeur " whence the meaning of O. Fr. naschier, and of the forms we have already discussed above. For the sense of " hoqueter ", we may note :

1859 De Montesson, Vocab. du Haut-Maine, 333 : " Naquer, Naqueter v. n. Bégayer, ânonner, avoir le hoquet ".

The meanings connected with the sense of " happer " are particularly numerous; for the meaning " tooth ", cf. : (I) Cherbourg naqueter " claquer des dents, trembler de froid ", Orne naquets " yeux " (terme familier : ? " ceux qui happent "), Dol nachard, naquin " taquin, mauvais plaisant ", Pléchâtel nachard " sournois, en dessous ", nacharder " faire le nachard "; (Duméril, 161 ; Lecomte, I, 148, 149 ; Dottin et Langouët) ;

(II) Haut-Maine nacron " épine crochue de ronce, de rosier ", nagre " rude, sévère, maussade, chagrin " (De Montesson, 333) ;

B.-Maine naguer " prendre avec les dents (en parlant des animaux), être vexé (en parlant des hommes) " ; naguet " qui nargue, hargneux " ; nagoter " mordiller, taquiner ", nague, nagre " hargneux, rude ", naquard " taquin ", naqueron " piquant de ronce, de rosier, d'épine, d'arête de poissons " [i. e. tout ce qui happe], " maussade " (Dottin, 364, 610) ;

(III) Perche naquet " dent de chien " ;

(IV) Vendômois naquée " coup de dent, morsure " ; naquets " dents canines, surtout en parlant des animaux carnivores " ; naqueter " mordre, se servir de ses naquets, trembler de froid, claquer des dents " (Martellière, 217) ;

(V) Berry naque, naquette, naquaude, " dent d'enfant " ; naquer " claquer des dents " ; naqueter " mordiller, claquer des dents ", naquetée " morsure " (Jaubert, II, 98, 581, Suppl., 21) ;

(VI) Morvan naquette, naquotte, " petite dent, dent d'enfant " ; nagueiller " mâchonner, mordre avec négligence sans manger " (Chambure, 588, 589) ;

(VII) Champagne naque, naquelle " dent ", naquetter " tirer avec les dents ", naquiller " manger du bout des dents " ;

(VIII) Meuse nâcher, nâquiller " manger dédaigneusement et du bout des dents " ; nâchar " qui mange sans goût, du bout des dents ", nâcheries " aliments malsains, indigestes comme les fruits verts ", naquoter " frapper à petits coups redoublés avec un outil en piochant la terre, travailler nonchalamment surtout lorsqu'il s'agit de culture " ; etc.

Another idea connected with that of "breathing through the nose", is that of "snot":

(I) Poitou nacre "morve du nez", nacrou "morveux, drôle" (Lalanne, 192); verduno-chalonnais naque "morve", naqué "craché", naquou "morveux" (Fertiault, 278); Bresse louhannaise naque, niaque, niaquou; Bresse naquer "faire jaillir de l'eau, de la boue"; Bourgogne naiquai (Mignard, 227);

(II) Saintonge naquet, naqueton "petit laquais, petit valet", naqueter (Jonain, 277); Forez naquerot "nain, petit homme" (Gras, 105); cf. Middle Fr. naquet.

Still another meaning derived from this root and connected with the idea "happer, attraper, accrocher" must be mentioned here: Haut-Maine nâche "longe, lien" (Montesson, 333); Bas-Maine nâche "attache qui lie une vache à la mangeoire, collet pour prendre le gibier" (Dottin, 364); Anjou nâche "attache qui lie une vache à la mangeoire, licol, corde qui sert spécialement à conduire les bestiaux", nâcher "attacher les vaches à l'étable" (Verrier et Onillon, II, 51); Dol nache (Lecomte, I, 149); Pléchâtel nâche, nâcher (Dottin et Langouet, 121); Rennes nâche, nâcher (Coulabin, 255); etc., because ML, 5837 would derive it from Breton nask "corde qui sert à attacher les bestiaux par les cornes, soit pour les retenir à l'étable, soit pour les conduire dans les champs pour paître", naska "attacher les bestiaux par les cornes" (Legonidec, 346); but the Breton word has no analogues in Cornish and Welsh and must be an old borrowing from the French dialects.

Lastly with snakken "babiller" probably in principle "to speak through the nose, to speak unintelligibly" must be compared: B.-Maine nâcheiller "parler du nez", nâcheillou "qui parle du nez"; nâchonner "parler du nez"; naquer "bredouiller"; naquet "qui bredouille", naqueter "bredouiller" (Dottin, 364); H.-Maine nacter "bégayer, bredouiller, ânonner", naquer "bégayer, ânonner, avoir le hoquet" (Montesson, 333).

That early Germanic may have had a form NAKKAN by the side of SNAKKAN will be admitted: it still has nikken, nokken by the side of snikken, snokken. But there are strong reasons in favour of SNAKKAN as the type from which emanated the forms of the French dialects discussed in this note:

(I) Guernesey énaquer "crisser et claquer des dents comme un chien qui ronge un os ", énacs " restes d'un festin, happées " (Métivier, 201) implies SNAKK ;

(II) Lille avoir bon snac ; cf. 1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 433 : "Snaque, réputation. S'nom n'est pas en trop bon snaque..." [with a quotation from Chansons Lilloises];

(III) O. French naschier, nasquer ;

(IV) Fr. renasquer, a dialectal (? from Belgium) form accepted by the Académie in 1694 and suppressed in 1798 ; -

(V) Breton nask, naska alluded to above, and borrowed from an early French nasque, nasquer ;

(VI) Mons fournasquer, einfournasquer.

These facts can best be accounted for by admitting that SNAKKAN passed into the speech of North France in the metathetic form NASKAN.

It seems then to me that a type fer-snakkan is the one that will best account for the word fernaquer, etc., which clearly is an old borrowing from Germanic. Only we must suppose the intermediate form fernaskan.

With Picard fernaquer, fournaquer will go the Picard adjective fenake :

1851 Corblet, Gloss. pic., 456 : "Fenake adj. qui s'emploie toujours dans un sens négatif. On dit en parlant du poisson : î n'est pas bien fenake, il n'est pas très frais. — Pour exprimer qu'une plante ne pousse pas bien on dit aussi qu'elle n'est pas bien fenake ", in which the original idea is connected with " breath, scent, smell ".

See also note 58 on *fernailler*³.

To the sources given above, I may add from the dictionary of the dialect of Erquinghem-sur-la-Lys, compiled in the winter of 1914-5 :

" Fernaki " fureter, farfouiller ".

Fournaki " mettre le nez partout ".

60. — Bas-Maine ferniller " to move about ", fourniller " to search ", feuniller, founiller, Rennes founiller " to fumble or ferret about ", Anjou, Jura fourniller, etc.

See note 58 on *fernailler*³.

61. — Fernillère "spider".

Rolland, Fa. Pop., XII, 124 among the names of the spider gives ferniyère f. for Saint-Braix (Suisse rom.), which is a communication of E. Edmont, cf. ALF, Map 50, point 72.

This isolated name of the spider looks like a substantive of the agent from a verb ferniller, fernier; cf :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : " Vernaeyen, recouldre ; al syn garen ver-naeyen, employer tout son fil à coudre " ; —

cf. also Alsatian vernäjen „ zu Ende nähen, fertig nähen ”.

Cf. the Germanic names of the spider derived from the root of SPINNAN : Dutch spin, spinnekop ; English spider ; Germ. Spinne ; and the filère which in various forms (filire, felère, flère, frèle, flire) is quoted for Alsace, the Vosges, the Meurthe by Rolland, Fa. Pop., III, 236 and XII, 124 ; Moselle feulère (Zéliquon, 265).

62. — O. Fr. fernoer.

See note 38 on ferarmer, etc.

The O. Fr. fernoer is attested by God., in only one text.

The word survives in the East of France :

1898 Liégeois, Lexique du pat. gaumet, Compl., in Bull. de la soc. liégeoise de litt. wallonne, XLI, 156 : " Farnoweye v. tr. Faire un nœud double ”.

1924 Zéliquon, Dict. des pat. rom. de la Moselle, 264 : " Fèrnouai. Noué par tous les bouts, difficile à défaire ”. — 17 : " Anfernawé. Noué par tous les bouts, difficile à défaire, en désordre. Se dit surtout du fil, de la ficelle, etc ”.

Cf. also technical French for nouer.

63. — Boulogne-s-Mer ferpigné.

SOURCE :

1903 Haigneré, Vocab. du pat. boulonn., 264 : " Ferpigné. adj. se dit des cheveux ou d'une pelote de fil, lorsqu'ils sont hérissés, enchevêtrés les uns dans les autres, frisés, et mêlés dans un désordre inextricable. Ses caveux i sont tout ferpignés ”.

Seems to be a compound of fer- and pigner " peigner ”.

64. — Anjou fersiller, Maine ferziller, Ille-et-Vilaine ferziller, fesiller " to sizzle ; to begin to seethe ” ; Valenciennes verziller " to be very much on the move ”.

SOURCES :

1891 H. Coulabin, Dict. des loc. pop. de Rennes, 164 : “ Fesiller v. n. Ce verbe manque à notre langue. Il exprime d’une façon imitative le bruit du beurre ou de la graisse dans la poêle, du fer rouge plongé dans l’eau ou appliqué sur la peau ”.

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 200 : “ Ferzillant, tout à fait, très. — Ferziller, faire du bruit (la graisse dans la poêle ou le fer rouge dans l’eau) ”. — 575 “ Ferziller, frétiller ; bruire ; fourmiller : Ca me ferzille dans le bras (Craonnais) ”.

1899 Dottin et Langouet, Gloss. de Pléchatel, 63 : “ Fersiller, frétiller ”.

1908 Verrier et Onillon, Gloss. de l’Anjou, i, 386 : “ Fersiller. v. n. Se dit pour un liquide qui commence à bouillir ”.

Fersiller is probably for earlier fersier, fersëer corresponding to a middle Dutch versêden : cf.

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : “ Verzieden, insieden, consumer à bouillir, bouillir entièrement ”.

1730 Marin, Gr. dict. holl.-franç., “ Verzieden . . . , ébouillir . . . ” ;

cf. also the various senses of German versieden.

What is the real meaning of O. Prov. frezillar (in ab son drut frezilla) which Raynouard, Lex. rom., iii, 400 translates by “ frétiller ” ? Is frezillar used metaphorically like the Fr. frémir or the English seethe ? The influence of frétiller has been felt in the explanations of ferziller given by dialect dictionaries. From the sense of “ to seethe ” to that of “ to be very much on the move ” there seems a natural development and it is likely that the following group of words from Maubeuge should be added to the derivatives of the root of Dutch zieden :

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 479 : “ Verzillant, ante, adj. Remuant . . . Verziller. v. n. remuer beaucoup. Verzillon, dessin en zigzag. Verzillonner, tourner, aller en zigzag. Ces mots m’ont été communiqués par M. Quivy de Maubeuge ”.

Cf. also Norm. (Pays de Caux) vézillant “ alerte, vif, remuant, se dit d’un enfant bien portant ” (De Fresnay, 272), given also by Decorde, 133 as vésillant for the Pays de Bray.

For a similar development of meaning, cf. in Mistral, Trésor, i, 1182 : Fresina “ frémir, en parlant d’un liquide qui bout ” and old French fresine “ agitation ” in Jouffrois, 4091.

The oldest instance of the verb here considered is of the xiiith century : c. 1235 Huon de Meri, Tournoiement Antecrist, in God., iv, 141 :

“ [C]estoit une melodie,

De boire apres tel pain tel vin,
 Si fort, si franc, si fres, si fin,
 Si sade, souet, si fresillant,
 Que tout en fumes embasmet... ”, where I should propose to replace God.'s translation : “ qui brille ” by “ qui mousse ”. Un vin mousseux is no doubt “ a sparkling wine ”, but the word fresillant rather refers to the bubbling of the wine which recalls that of water beginning to boil.

65. — Poitevin fertaler “ (of rain, hail, blows) to fall heavily ”.

SOURCE :

1868 Lalanne, Gloss. poitevin, 134 : “ Fertalé. v. n. tomber en abondance en parlant de la pluie, de la grêle ou des coups. V[ienne]. arr. Chât. Mairé... ” Fertulée. s. f. abondance, grande quantité : “ Fertalée d'eau, fertalée de coups ”. V[ienne], arr. Chât., Mairé ”.

Fertaler seems to be a metathetic form of ferlater equivalent to Fr. frelater q. v. as applied to the pouring out of liquids for clarification.

66. — Anjou, Maine fertouper, Anjou fortouper.

69. — Mons festéquer.

Sigart, Dict. du wallon de Mons (1866), 176 :

“ Festéquer, festéquier, v. n. faire un ouvrage inutile, un mauvais ouvrage, s'amuser à des riens ; faire semblant de travailler ; s'agiter sans résultat. V. fr. affaitier, raccommoder ”.

This verb, not mentioned by other lexicographers, seems clearly by its form to be connected with Dutch steeken “ to prick, to peg, to stake, etc. ”, but by what semantic process is not clear. It may be connected with such uses as are seen in een werk laten steeken “ to leave a piece of work unfinished ”, een zaak laten steeken “ not to go on with a thing one has undertaken". The senses of Dutch versteeken given in dictionaries do not appear to suit the senses given by Sigart for festéquer. Dornkaat-Koolman, Wtb. d. ostfriesischen Sprache, i, 467, explains E. Fris. fer-stäken, fer-stēken by German "verstecken, verstecken, wegstecken, verbergen, umstecken".

The meaning of feurdale appears to be "fragment". Cf. :

77. — Picardy, French Flanders flégard, flagard, fergard.

The word flégard is dealt with as follows in dictionaries of the North-Eastern dialects :

1787 Dict. roman, walon, celtique et tudesque, 119 : “ Flégard, lieu public, qui n'appartient, en propre, à aucun particulier : tel est un marché, une rue, ou quelque commune ”.

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 210 : “ Flégard, petite ruelle étroite qui reçoit les eaux sales des maisons voisines, qu'elle conduit à la rivière ; elle est ordinairement fermée. Ce mot est employé en plusieurs endroits, même dans une signification plus étendue, puisqu'il y signifie tout endroit à découvert, qui n'est la propriété d'aucun particulier... A Lille on l'emploie pour le revers des pavés des maisons, pour les séparer du fil de l'eau ou ruisseau qui les longent ”.

1851 Corblet, Gloss. pic., 462 : “ Flégard. Endroit public à découvert. Cotgrave donne ce nom comme Picard. Il n'est guère usité qu'à Boulogne-sur-Mer ”.

1867 Vermesse, Dict. du pat. de la Flandre franç., 236 : “ Flégard ou fergards. s. m. Espace entre la maison et le fil d'eau qui longe la chaussée et que l'on nomme aujourd'hui trottoir ”.

1880 Jouancoux, Études, i, 284 : “ Flagard, espace perdu d'un chemin, d'une rue, d'une place ”.

1903 Haigneré, Vocab. boulonnais, 272 : “ Flégard. s. m. Terrain communal inculte, ordinairement composé par des excès de largeur contigus aux chemins publics. On prononce quelquefois fergard (variantes anciennes : flegart, fleguart et fregart) ”.

The form flégard (in documents also flagard e. g. in a text of 1688 in God. ; cf. also Jouancoux, Études, i, 284, art. flagard) seems to be the most frequent in late documents as in a Flines text of 1630 in God. ; it is the one occurring most often in the Coutumiers (see examples in God.), and it is noted in the bigger dictionaries e. g. Bescherelle, Dict. Univ., i, 1596 : “ Flégart ou Flégard s. m. Anc. cout. Place commune, grand chemin ”. We have a definition in the following :

1700 Liger, Nouv. mais. rustique, ed. 1755, i, 897 : “ Les frocs sont les places, carrefours, rues et autres lieux incultes, communs et publics à tout le village. On les appelle aussi en différentes provinces frous, frotis et flégards, en bas latin frocus ”.

It was noted in 1611 by Cotgrave as a Picard word meaning “ a common place or way ” and the oldest exactly dated text known to me in which it occurs is the following :

1507 Coutumes d'Amiens, in A. Thierry, Monum. de l'hist. du Tiers-État, 1^{ere} s., ii, 529 : “ Nul ne pœult picquier, fouir ne heuer sur les frocs et flegards ne en la terre et juridiction d'icelle [ville], sans le gré, consentement et licence des dits maieur, prevost et eschevins. . . ”.

By the side of flégard ou flagard, the forms fregard (cf. fergard still used at Lille and Boulogne) and fegard occur in older documents :

1441 Cart. de l'univ. des chapel. de N.-D. d'Amiens, 41 v^o, Bibl. Amiens : “ En toutes les voiries, fros, fegars de le dicte ville ”.

? Arch, P. 137, f^o 13 r^o (Dénombr. des baill. d'Amiens et de Doullens) : “ Le cloistre, voiriez, fregas, fros des rues du dit cloistre. . . ”.

The word flégard, etc., is used only in Picardy, Artois and French Flanders. Sigart does not know it in Hainault. Properly speaking it means “ common land not used for cultivation ” and it is said of open spaces, market squares, crossroads, roads, etc., in the village ; it is often applied to waste or unproductive land on both sides of the road, and so to the space between the houses in the village and the cutting made along the sides of the road for waste water, and so to the pavement in such villages as had any. In Valenciennes, its meaning was limited to the equivalent of “ sewer ”, to the conduit which carried away the waste water of the houses to the river.

From the phonetic point of view, it seems that of the forms fergard, fregard, fegart, flégard, the form fergard or fregard is the original one, and we may consider flégard and fegart as showing two types of dissimilation of the first r of the original form.

The geographical limits within which the word is found are of course very strongly in favour of a Germanic source. In the word fergard, fregard, we may then, as in other cases we have considered, find a substantive derived from an unattested verb fergarer* or fergarder*. As fergard is no doubt a very early loan-word, the g of the word must, in a Picard or Flemish dialect, go back to a Germanic g. An investigation of the possibilities suggests the verb vergaren of the Flemish and Dutch dialects, which is for vergaderen (Engl. to foregather). For the treatment of vergaderen in the Northern dialects one may compare the naval French gabord, attested from 1538, which like Engl. garboard corresponds to the Dutch garboord, gaderboord.

It seems possible then that fergar “ common land ” was derived from a lost verb fergarer* = Dutch vergaren “ to associate, the unite ; to meet, to foregather ”. It would then be in principle the land held in common, in association or union, by all.

78. = O. Walloon forhopper.

Forhopper is quoted by Grandgagnage, Dict. étym. de la langue wallonne, ii, 594 as an Old Walloon technical term used by drapers with the following extracts in support :

1527 Texts fr. Rec. des chartes et privilèges des 32 bons métiers de la cité de Liège, i, 325 s, 237^m : “ Ne pourrat ourdir chaine de forures forhoppés ” ; — “ Hors d’un forhoppé le tisseur ne peut jeter que six fils ”.

The form of the word forhopper naturally suggests the Dutch hoppen, hoppelen “ sauter, sautiller ” (cf. A. Sax. hoppian). The verb forhopper must mean “ to jump over, to miss (a thread) ”.

79. — Anjou formailler.

1845 Grandgagnage, Dict. étym. de la langue wallonne, i, 218 : “ 1. Fotrikè (fiche, outil de maçon) an., fotriker (ficher le mortier) id. Ce mot paraît être un dérivé de foter n° 1, par l’intermédiaire de la forme française correspondante ”.

The fiche used by masons is a kind of strike, i. e. a straight edged instrument for levelling something, as grain in a measure, clay in a bricklayer’s or potter’s mould, or sand in a founder’s mould, by scraping of the superfluous portion on top. In England, masons use to strike “ to make level (by wiping off projecting mortar from a joint) ”. In the Flemish and Dutch dialects, the verb strijken and its compounds are used by masons also ; cf. :

1730 Marin, Gr. dict. holland.-franç., 261 : “ Met kalk en kwast overstryken ;... men moet die muur met nieuwe kalk aanstryken... ” — 397 : “ Kalk om muuren te bestryken ”.

The Walloon fotriker represents a compound of the Germanic verb STRIKAN : cf. Germ. verstreichen in eine Mauer mit Mörtel verstreichen, die Dachziegel mit Mörtel oder Speis verstreichen. If the type whence fotriker is derived is a Frankish FIR-STRIKAN it is admissible to suppose that the normal Walloon fostriker* has become fotriker “ficher” through the influence of Walloon foter “ficher”, but it is not necessary.

81. — Rennes founigoter, B.-Maine fournicoter, fournigoter “to search, to seek”, Valenciennes enfourniquer, Gaumet fourniqueye.

In note 59 on Démuin fernaque, fornaquer, fournaquer “to ferret out, etc.”, I have endeavoured to show the survival of a Germanic SNAKK- in the North French dialects; and I have called attention to the equivalence of Germanic SNAKK- and Germanic SNIKK-.

There is no doubt that the North French dialects offer traces of the survival of Germanic SNIKK- although in less profusion than of Germanic SNAKK-, so that we are unable to distinguish SNIKK- from NIKK- as we can distinguish SNAKK- from NAKK- (see note 59).

It is usual to explain French nique in faire la nique, niche in faire une niche, Walloon, Rouchi, Franc.-Comtois niquet “after dinner nap”, Bourg. niquet “nod” by Dutch nik, nikken “to bow, to nod”. It is of course doubtful that nique “sign of derision” and niche “prank, practical joke” have the same origin; in any case in the Dutch and Flemish dialects knikken is equivalent to nikken:

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale: “Nick, ziet Knick; nicken met ten hoofde, hocher la teste, faire signe de la teste; . . . Knicken met ten hoofde, niqueter, faire signe de la teste; eenen knick, niquet, nique, le signe qu'on fait de la teste en demonstrent son vouloir”.

Further faire la nique is of course not “to nod with the head” but “to make some sign of mockery”; cf.

1611 Cotgrave, Dict.: “Nique, faire la nique, To mock by nodding, or lifting up of the chinne; or more properly, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumb naile into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knock. . . Niquet, as Nique; also a knick, tickle, snap with the teeth, or fingers; a trifle, nifle, bable, matter of small value. . .”.

Here the sign of derision made with the nail against the upper teeth brings us nearer to snacken, snicken and their attested values. One may also compare with Cotgrave's “lifting up of the chinne”, the translation “chuck under the chin” given to niquet in the following passage by the editor of the text:

1512 Contreblason de faulses amours, in G. Alexis, Œuvres, SATF, i, 316: “Fuyez. — Jeudz, tournois, volleries, chasse, Baisiers, attouchemens, nicquès,

Lascivieux mos, telz ou quelz,
Que Dieu de vous tout mal enchasse”.

Again, in regard to French niqueter “to nick (a horse’s tail)” not attested before the sixteenth century, GEW, 638 says: “niqueter... ist wall. Mons aus englisch to nick “einkerben”, adopting the assertion of Sigart, Gloss. de Mons, 266; but niqueter “to notch” is attested in the sixteenth century:

1421 Inv. de l'artill. de Blois, in Gay, Gloss. Arch., i, 47: “Une arbaleste d’if de Romenie, lye a deux liens de fer, a un esmail d’argent, semee de fleurs de lys en l’arbrier au dessoulz de la noix, et est l’arbrier niqueté”.

Enough has been said to show that the exact origin of the words of the form nique, niquer, niquet, niqueter in French is not known; the origin is Germanic but the original form remains doubtful.

The following quotations on the meaning of the verb snikken will be useful:

(I) 1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale: “Snikken, suivre le trac ou la trace par l’odeur”.

(II) E. Fris. snikken, snikkern “singultire oder stossweise einen laut hören lassen” (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb. d. ost-friesischen Sprache, iii, 244).

(III) For the German schnicken “to throw back (of birds), to shake the tail vertically, to shake off (the rain)” where the first sense is “to shake”; cf. W. Flem. snokken “tirer par saccade, par secousses (De Bo, 915)”.

For the sense of “to shake”, cf.

1823 Remacle, Dict. wallon-franç., 233: “Niket. s. m. Cahot, saut d’une voiture; secousse; ébranlement de ce qui est secoué... Nikté. v. a. Agiter, tirer par secousses, par bonds; s’agiter, se remuer”.

For the other senses, in so far as they occur in the dialects of North France, it is important to see how closely they approximate to those attested for snakk- in note 59:

I. — With nac, naque “flair, odorat, nez”, cf. Poitou nicle “narine” (Favre, 241), niclouère “narine” (Lalanne, 194), the latter form implying nicler* “to scent”;

II. — With naque "morve", cf. : Montbéliard nique "morve, mucus nasal", se niquai "se moucher avec les doigts, se moucher", niquai "morveux", niqueret "gros paquet de morve, mouchoir", niquet "gros paquet de morve" (Contejean, 305); Franche-Montagne nique "morve" (Grammont); Gr.-Combe nique "mucus nasal" (Boillot, 212); Bournois nique "morve", niquet "masse de morve" (Roussey, 219); also Montbéliard renichai "renifler" (Contejean, 385), by the side of Eure niquer "moucher" (Robin, 274), niquette "mouchoir", etc ;

III. — With naque "dent", cf. Poitou nequette, niquette "dent" (Lalanne, 193), Berry nique, niquette "dent" (Jaubert, ii, 609). Cf. also with Meuse nâcher "manger dédaigneusement et du bout des dents", W. Norm. niquet "délicat, nice" (Duméril, 162);

IV. — With renâcler, etc., cf. Bresse loughannaise renâcler, renacquier, renicler "faire quelque chose en rechignant, avec humeur; trouver des obstacles, des prétextes pour ne point faire ce que l'on vous ordonne; reculer" (Guillemaut, 266); Verduno-Chalonnais renicler "renâcler; (au fig.) hésiter, reculer", reniquer "renier, refuser la chose promise" (Fertiault, 369); Morvan eurniquer "refuser quelque chose à quelqu'un" (Chambure, 336); Berry renicler "renâcler" (Jaubert, ii, 609); cf. also Valenciennes renicter "trouver à reprendre, critiquer minutieusement", renicieux "qui trouve à reprendre à tout, qui regarde à tout" (Hécart, 402);

V. — With naquer "to hiccup, to babble, to stutter", etc., cf. H.-Maine niquer "bégayer" (Montesson, 337).

The object of this rather long introduction has been to show the close connection between the North French dialectal words containing Germanic SNÄKK- and those which appear to contain Germanic SNIKK-; and in that way to lead to the question of the survival of any combination of the type FER-SNIKKAN parallel to that of the type FER-SNÄKKAN which we have considered in note 59. The survival is indicated by the following facts :

(1) Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 176 translated s'enfournaquer by "enfourniquer, se mettre dans de mauvaises affaires" ;

(2) Liégeois, Compl^t du Lexique Gaumet, in Bull. de la Soc. liégeoise de litt. wallonne, xli, 159 gives : "Fourniqueye. v. int. Fureter, chercher parmi diverses choses éparses" ;

(3) West of the departments of the Eure and the Seine-Inférieure we lose traces of fernaquer, fourniquer, fournager, fournager

(see note 59); but in Maine and French speaking Brittany occur forms which imply fourniquer, fourniguer :

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 214 : “ Fournigauder, fournigoter, chercher, fureter, remuer avec un bâton ” [for bâton, dse probably to fourgoter “ agiter un bâton dans un trou ”]. “ Fournicoter, fouiller, chercher ”.

1891 Coulabin, Dict. des loc. pop. de Rennes, 169 : “ Founigoter. v. a. farfouiller, mettre son nez où l'on n'a que faire... Ça v's' apprendra à founigoter dans mes affaires ”.

82. — O. Fr. fourbot.

SOURCE from God., iv, 114 :

1310 Arch. comm. de Mons, Ch. du comte Guillaume I de Hainaut pour la draperie de Mons, 26 juin : “ Et qui fourbot u assanlee feroit, il seroit a sissante sauls a nous et a chiunch sauls a le draperie essauchier ”.

God., who gives no other example of fourbot, explains it by “tumulte”. It seems to mean “anything forbidden” and to be equivalent to the verbed of the Dutch and Flemish dialects.

Cf. note on verbode.

83. — Gaumet fourboulaye.

See note 40 on Moselle fèrbolaye.

84. — French fourlore, frelore.

For this word derived from the Frankish word corresponding to Middle Dutch verloren, I call attention to the variable form of the prefix, as it confirms the views derived from the examination of many other words :

(1) O. Fr. forelore ; c. 1190 Roman de Renart, Br. xv (Méon, 2840) : “ Dist Renart : “ Tot est forelores ” ;

(2) Norm. fourlore s. m. “ feu follet ” (Duméril, 108) ; cf. slang fourloure “ sick ” attested from 1690 ;

(3) Norm. furlore is quoted by Sainéan, Sources indigènes, i, 273, as given by Moisy. I cannot find it. That it is a likely form is shown by the fur- forms given in notes 114-125. Norm. fourolle, s. f. “ torche ” (Duméril, 108) seems to be to fourlore as furole, furolle “ feu follet, lutin, revenant ” to an attested form furlore ;

(4) Poitou ferlor, -e, adj. “ Enfoncé ”. Gâtine (Lalanne, 134) ;

(5) Middle Fr. frelore ; c. 1464 Maistre Pathelin : “ Nostre fait seroit tout frelore, S'il vous trouvoit levé ” ; 1552 Rabelais, iv, 18 :

“ tout est frelore, bigoth ”. — Cf. Genève, frelore “ perdu ” ; Damprichard freloure “ perdu ” (Boillot, Pat. de la Grand'Combe, 147), etc. ; Middle Fr. frelorier “ vaurien ” (one example in God).

85. — O. Fr. fourmont “ ? levier ”, Walloon formonte “ part of a wall rising above the roof ”, etc.

SOURCE in God., iv, 115 :

1404 Arch. JJ, 258, pièce 361 : “ Les quelx deux couples de fer le suppliant a un hostile dit fourmont, il leva ou arracha ”.

The tool called fourmont would seem to have been a lever so that fourmont would be the verbal substantive of a verb fourmonter* “ to raise up ” which has not so far been attested.

The existence of a verb formonter in Walloon is shown by the verbal substantive formonte :

1880 Grandgagnage, Dict. étym. de la langue wallonne, ii, 526 : “ Formonte, partie du mur qui dépasse le toit, Sim. 2 ; f. di teüt : pièce de bois qui fait le haut de la charpente d'un bâtiment ; table de plomb creuse qu'on met au haut d'un toit, Rouv. ”.

See note 81 on Rennes founigoter.

89. — Fralater, fralatement, etc.

See note 96 on frelater.

90. — Norm. frateler “ to tell ”, fretel “ tale ”.

SOURCE :

1627 David Ferrand, Muse Normande, ed. Héron, i, 111 : “ Ne fratelle-t'on point la haut, devers ste Boise De st'agnel qu'ont mangé chinq ou six chavetiers ? ”

1642 op. cit., ii, 235 : “ Ne no z'eluge illoq de ten fretel... ”.

1647 op. cit., iii, 143 : " Mais y n'aveit d'autre fretel : " J'ai trouvoy un nid dans du plastre " .

1651 op. cit., iii, 241 : " Et ne dis pu jamais su vieux frestel : " Bien, ch'est tout un pour may, je l'ay ouy dire " .

1669 op. cit., iv, 140 : " Dy may, Fleuren, chette deffaite Que tu prosne par ten fretel... " .

In the Glossaire to the Muse Normande, frateler is translated by " bavarder " and fretel, frestel by bavardage ". The verb in the only passage in which it occurs means " to tell ", " to relate ". The substantive fretel can, I think, be translated by " tale " in the four passages in which it occurs. Frateler otherwise not attested seems to bear the same relation to Flemish and Dutch vertellen as fralater, frelater does to Flemish and Dutch verlaten.

91. — French fredaine.

Fredaine has always been a source of difficulty to etymologists.

Ménage suggested a form fraudana* from L. fraus. Both Littré and the DG declare the origin unknown. Littré however adds the question : " Faudrait-il y voir un rapport avec le bourguignon vre-dai " aller çà et là " ou plutôt avec fredon, la fredaine étant à la conduite ce que le fredon est au chant " ?

GEW, 440 : " Fredaine jugendstreich ", 15. Jhdt. " arrogantes Auftreten " ist. Abl. von afrz. fredir " übel mitnehmen ", s. Godefr. froidir, dieses aus mlat. (fredare) " die Strafsumme einfordern ", dann " belastigen ", s. frais " .

L. Sainéan, Sources indigènes de l'étym. franç., ii, considers fredaine to be connected with fredon : " L'alternance trudon-trudaine trouve son pendant en fredon-fredaine, le premier appliqué au chant des oiseaux et de l'homme (xvi^e siècle), le deuxième, dès le xv^e siècle, avec le sens figuré de folie de jeunesse, proprement chanson, et refrain de chanson : " fredon, fredon, fredondille... " (Rabelais, i, 27) " .

The modern meaning of fredaine is " écart de conduite par folie de jeunesse, de tempérament ou autrement " (Littré). If we go back to Cotgrave (1611) we get : " fredaine : f. a gudgeon, mockery, wile, gullery; a deceitfull part, a roguish pranke, a knavish or cousening device ". In the Muse Normande (1625 sq.) the word occurs e. g. iii, 257, 274 and Héron, the editor, translates it by " mauvais tour "; in the following passage (i, 85) :

" Un fol antien no mit à la fredaine
De rebuter et le Rey et la Reine, Disant qu'un roc suffiset o z'echets... "

he renders mettre à la fredaine by " pousser à la folie ". The earliest texts in which fredaine has been found are :

1420 See Ducange, arts fredare, narire : the explanation given is " fanfaronnade, vanterie ".

c. 1470-80 Coquillard, Œuvres, Bibl. Elz., i, 174 : " La bourgeoise eust un autre amy,

A qui elle donne et advance

Ces quatre aunes de satin cy.

Il les prent et est resjouy,

Il fringue et en fait sa fredaine ". [The explanation suggested by the editor is " folie, folle ostentation "].

To explain fredaine, the first point to note is that it is a Northern word. Mistral has no equivalent of it. The first text containing the word and which it is possible to locate is from Champagne. It is used in Normandy and in Picardy; for Picardy, cf. Fruges fardaine " fredaine " in Edmont, Lexique Saint-Polois, 103.

Then the meanings best attested in French are " youthful folly, foolish prank, foolish ostentation ".

I suggest that these meanings are explained by a Germanic form represented by Middle Dutch and Middle Flemish verdaen, past part. of the verb verdoen in which the idea of " folly " is already clearly marked; cf :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : " Verdoen syn göedt, dissiper, gaspiller ou consommer et despandre follement son bien... Verdaen, dissipé, gaspillé, consommé ".

It is in the French-speaking districts that fredaine would have come to be used as a substantive meaning " wild or foolish or useless expenditure ". From the idea of " foolish expense, wild dissipation " the meanings attested in French for fredaine are derivable.

92. — French fredonner " 1. (obs.) to trill; 2. to hum ".

DG, 1117 derives fredonner from fredon and considers fredon of unknown origin.

GEW, 440 has attempted to explain these words as follows : " FREDON " Triller, Vereinigung von drei gleichen Karten beim Kartenspiel " 16. Jhdt., ist mit Suffixwechsel umgestaltet aus *fredor, das sich aus mittellatein. frigidorae im 11. Jhdt. erschliessen lässt; dieses scheint zu lat. friguttire, fringulire " zwitschern " zu gehören ; vielleicht liegt ein vlat. frigitore* zu lat. frīgère " quietschen " zugrunde.

Dazu seit dem 16. Jhdt. die Abl. fredonner " trillern, trällern ". Oder ursprünglich Refrain ? "

This explanation, it seems to me, can only have been put forward for want of a better and is certainly to be rejected.

The first known appearance of fredonner or of its derivatives is of the year 1546 (fredonnement, Rabelais, iii, 46 : " Les fredonnements des lucs, rebecs et violons "; fredon in Palmerin d'Olive, 228b : " Chacun s'en resjouyssoit ; mesmement des fredons et nouveaux passages dont il usoit)". They are, from the beginning of the evidence we have of them, terms of music, of playing and singing, and their use in the xvth century can be gleaned from Cotgrave :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : " Fredon : m. A semy-quaver, or semy-semy-quaver in musicke ; and hence, division ; and a warbling, shaking, or quavering. Faire fredon sur fredon. To heape curiosity upon curiosity, to adde one nice point unto another, or use many together. Fredonner. To shake, divide, warble, quaver in singing, or playing on an instrument.

Fredonneux : m. euse : f. full of semie-semie-quavers ; or of quavering, shaking, warbling ; dividing much.

Fredonniser, as fredonner "

The Modern Dutch deunen " to sing, to play " is dealt with as follows by Den Schat der duytscher Tale in 1630 :

" Deunen, jouer, bourder, ou reten[t]ir, faire bruit, sonner, resonner, esclater, tonner.

Deuninghe, retentissement, modulation, facétie.

Donen, ziet deunen "

The Modern Dutch deun " lied, gesang " is attested in a Middle Dutch form don(e) in the xvth century (Frank van Wyk, Etym. Woordenboek d. nederlandsche Taal, 1912, p. 113). A Middle Dutch verdonen* would explain the French fredonner and could be compared with German versingen " to spend (e. g. the time) in singing, to drive away (e. g. care) by singing, etc. ", or German verspielen " to spend (e. g. the time) in playing ". This explanation of the French fredonner would be satisfactory if we could be certain that it was introduced into French in the xvth century for the first time; but it is well to add that although the Dutch don(e) is not attested before the xvth century, it belongs to a Germanic root which is attested long before: cf. O. Sax. dunian, A. Sax. dynian interpreted by German dröhnen i. e. "gronder, retentir, trembler"; so that even if it could be shown that the Fr. fredonner was much older than the xvth century, the explanation by the same Germanic root would hold good.

The form veurdonner in Bas-Maine should be noted:

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du B.-Maine, 519: "Veurdonner, fredonner; — danser (Ernée)".

Cf. also:

1869 Jonain, Gloss. saintongeais, 184: "Frdouner, fredonner...".

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du B.-Maine, 198: "Feurdonner, fredonner".

1896 Fertault, Dict. verduno-chalonnais, 174: "Feürdoner, v. tr. fredonner, chantonner".

93. — O. French frefel.

God.'s article Frefel (with variants frefeil, ferfel, fravall), contains eleven probatory texts.

One of these, the last, of 1398, comes from the Archives of Fribourg in Switzerland, and contains the form fravall, which has nothing to do with frefeil, and the origin of which is dealt with by Tappolet, Die alemannischen Lehnwörter in den Mundarten der französischen Schweiz, ii, 43, 44.

Of the remaining texts, one is from Li Beaus Desconeus and in it the expression en grant ferfel rimes with somel (= Fr. sommeil). The other nine are from Froissart's Poésies or from his Chroniques. Invariably we have the combination en frefel (en ce f., en tel f., en grant f.). The same assertion may be made of three other examples in Froissart's Meliador, SATF, 11338, 11963, 20751 (en frefel, en ce frefeil), in which frefeil rimes with conseil.

The word frefeil (frefel, ferfel) is translated by God. "trouble, tumulte, agitation", by Longnon, the editor of Meliador, "agitation, trouble". It has survived:

(a) at Valenciennes: fourfêlé, fourfiele "émoi", ête en fourfêlé (Hécart, 215);

(b) at Lille: in fourfelle, in foufelle (Vermesse, 250);

(c) at Tourcoing : in fougelle ;

(d) at Frameries, 5 k. s. E. of Mons ; corrupted to in fougète.

J. Haust, in Romania, xlvii, 565, and Étymologies wallonnes et françaises, 102, explains frefeil, frefel as from a form corresponding to Dutch wrevel " colère, humeur revêche, farouche, hargneuse, fantasque ". My objections to this explanation are partly phonetic (WR-> fr-) and partly semantic.

I prefer to put frefel, frefeil, ferfel into relation with Dutch verveelen :

1730 Marin, Grand dict. holl.-franç., 949 : " Verveelen. v. a. lastig vallen, verdrieten. Incommoder, fatiguer, ennuyer. — Ik vrees u te verveelen. Je crains de vous incommoder. Dat geraas my te veel. Ce bruit m'incommode trop".

For the origin of the meaning of this verb derived from veel " much ", cf. Frank van Wijk, Etym. Wdb, 733, 737 under the words verlangen, verveelen.

94. — N. Eastern fregar.

See note 77 on flégard.

95. — French frelampier.

See note 46 on ferlamper.

96. — French frelater " to adulterate, to sophisticate "

The first example of this word at present known is :

1546 Rabelais, iii, 38 : " Couillon frelatté ", where the meaning of frelatté is perhaps " loose, hanging down ".

The origin of frelater and its derivation from an equivalent of Dutch verlaten " to leave, forsake, let go, etc. " has long been known.

The usual meaning of frelater as applied to wine comes from such a phrase as verlaten den wijn :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : " Verlaten den wijn, clarifier le vin, fralater", properly " to let go, to pour out the wine so as to get rid of the lees " :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : " fralater. To rack wine, to draw it off the lees ; to shift, or powre it out of one vessell into another... frelater, to racke, or draw wine from the lees, and put it into a new vessel... "

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : “ Verlaten, afgieten d'olie, tirer l'huile de ses ordures... ”.

So frelater des harengs is to pass them from one keg into another. The sense of adulteration (of wine) is later than that of clarification.

As the origin of frelater is certain, one should note the variant forms with FRA-, FAR- :

(i) 1549 R. Estienne, Dict., in DG : “ Fralater du vin ” ; 1611 Cotgrave who gives fralater, fralatement as well as frelater, frelatement, frelateur ; DG gives frelatage with a first example of 1684 but fralatage occurs before 1655 in Nicolas de Bonnefons, Délices de la Campagne, ed. 1665, p. 46 : “ C'est une espèce de fralatage ou changement de tonneau, qui diminue et affaiblit nos vins d'autour de Paris ”.

Cf. rouchi fralatache in Hécart, 217.

104. — Champagne freluque "wisp (of hair)".

See Misc. Lexic., iv, 9.

105. — Fr. freluquet.

There are three meanings attested for freluquet :

(I) "Very small coin" : 1611 Cotgrave : "Freluquet : m. a. French halfpenny"; Nouv. Fabrique des traits de vérité in DG : "Quarante quatre freluquets de trois blancs".

(II) "Homme léger, frivole, et sans mérite" (1718 ACAD. which adds : "Il est du style familier"). — The word is often used with the adjective petit : 1686 Baron, L'homme à bonnes fortunes, iii, 1 : "Ce petit freluquet de Monade, avec ses avis impertinents !" — 1611 Cotgrave : "Freluquet : m. also a spruce dwarfe, a pretty dapper fellow".

(III) "Little leaden weight used by ribbon-makers" : 1760 Savary des Bruslons, Dict. du Comm., ii, 764 : "Freluquet (Rubanier). Ce sont de très petits poids de plomb pesant environ un demi-gros : ce petit poids est percé d'outre en outre pour donner passage à un fil qui les suspend : ce fil est arrêté par les deux bouts noués au trou du poids, et sert à passer chaque brin de glacis pour le tenir en équilibre pendant le travail".

Freluquet (I) is a diminutive of freluque on which we have the following information :

1454 Arch., JJ 184, pièce 478 : "Pour ung virolan de noire monnoie nommee au pays frelusques" [le pays = Ponthieu].

1459 Arch., JJ 189, pièce 358 : "Le duc de Bourgoigne a fait courir ou pays de Boullenois... certaines monnoies noires de son coing de petite valeur que aucuns appeloient frelucques".

The form freluque explained by "demi-denier tournois" is given for Guernesey by Métivier, Dict. franco-norm., 225, and frelusque for la Vallée d'Yères by God. Freluque as a name of a coin appears to be the same word as freluque (= Fr. freluche) in the sense of "thing of small value", given jestingly to the Burgundian coins issued for currency by Philip the Good. But I take it that the proper form of the name was frelisque, furlisque, and that it meant a "quarter" :

1375 Arch, JJ 107, pièce 66 : "Lequel Robert changeur a achaté et prins monnoie appellee poitevines on furreliques....".

This is made clear by the text of 1454 quoted above where the proper name of the coins is given as virelan from virleuc (cf. Dutch vierling "fourth part of a piece of money"). The form furrelique may be compared with virlique, a term of the game called romes-tecq :

1758 Acad. Univ. des jeux, ed. 1789, i, 335 : "On appelle virlicque, lorsqu'il arrive en main à un joueur, quatre as, quatre rois ou quatre de quelque autre point que ce soit, en observant que le plus haut emporte le plus bas et celui qui gagne la partie".

So far as the form freluque is concerned, it must be considered as the same word as French freluche, given in jest to coin called furrelique or virlan.

Freluquet (II) has been dealt with by Le Duchat in his explanation of frelu in the passage of the Satire Ménippée quoted in note 106 on frelus. I extract the following :

1750 Ménage, Dict. étym., i, 625 : "Frelu. T. d'injure et de mépris... De ce mot vient le diminutif freluquet, qui chez nous signifie un gueux dont les habits sont tout déchirés et chargés de freloques... Dans ce passage du Catholicon d'Espagne, frelu ou gueux veut dire hérétique, et c'est une allusion aux réformés de Flandre, auxquels on donne le nom de gueux. De frelu vient aussi freluquet qui se dit d'un jeune homme qui se fait un mérite d'être frisé et godronné, à l'exemple des mignons du roi Henri iii".

According to Le Duchat, then :

(a) Frelu properly means "ragged beggar" and was given as a name to the Protestants just as gueux in 1566 was applied to the Protestant insurgents in the Low Countries. This would explain that as a term of abuse frelu was transferred like other words (ex. g. guilbedoin) from the Protestants to the Politiques by the partisans of the Ligue. If frelu comes from Champagne as appears to be the case (see text of 1592 in note on frelus), one may remember that it is in Champagne that freluche is attested in the sense of “rag” and I am informed by Dr Chassinat-Gigot, whose birth-place is Reims, that in that city freluchon is used of a “man in rags”.

(b) Freluquet is a diminutive of frelu; in his own part of the country (Lorraine: Le Duchat was born at Metz in 1653), freluquet means “ragged beggar”. Freluquet, he seems to suggest, was applied to the favourites of Henry iii; this tallies with the fact that so far no text containing freluquet in sense (II) has been found before Cotgrave (1611). Freluquet might then be explained by a comparison of the ornaments of dress (ruffles, laces, etc.) of the minions to rags or trifles.

Freluquet (III) is considered by the DG as an extension of the meaning of freluquet (I). If that be so, then all the meanings of freluquet are to be connected with Fr. freluche, the history of which I have examined in Miscellanea Lexicographica, iv, 9, and the root of which remains unknown.

106. — Late Middle French frelus “lost; routed”.

The only xvth century texts containing frelu are quoted by Sainéan, Sources indigènes, i, 324 as follows:

1592 Pigenat, Traité en faveur de la maison de Lorraine: “Ceux que nous appelons Maheutres à Paris, Frelus et Mettins en Champagne, Guilbedoins en Basse-Normandie et en Poitou, Bigarrez en Provence...”.

1593 Satire Ménippée, ed. Franck, 181: “C’est un Maheustre et un Frelu Pire qu’un Turc ou Mammelu...”.

These texts quote nicknames applied in various parts of France to the Politiques or moderate party of the time, and the first of them is interesting because it claims that frelu was in that sense used in Champagne.

Sainéan supposes the word was introduced from Berry whereas the only evidence of contemporaries is in favour of its introduction from Champagne. He further says: “Frelu (freluc) “gourmand” a acquis, en passant en français, le sens de “voleur” (Cotgrave) par une évolution analogue à celle de “fripon”. I know of no sound evidence for either of these meanings. What Cotgrave says is this:

1611 Cotgrave: “Frelus, as Frelore; or overthrowne horse and foot”.

In other words frelus means “lost” and is used of a defeated army in the sense of "routed". It is clear that Cotgrave had access to texts which have not yet been noted and where frelus was probably a different word from the frelu found in the quotations of 1592 and 1593.

Without dated and located texts, it is impossible to clear up the origin of ferlus "lost". It is apparently not a noun (E. Fris. ferlûs "loss" = German verlust), but an adjective or a participle; cf.:

(i) E. Fris. verlüdt, verloren, verkommen, verschollen, etc.; de bûdel (Wirtschaft, Haushalt, Familie, Sache, etc.) is gans ferlüdt (verloren, verkommen, nicht mehr zu halten u. zu retten, etc.); — hê is ferlüdt (verloren, weg, verschollen, etc.). Wohl zu ferlûden (als beläutet u. so auch todt, weg, etc.) od. zu ferlûden im Sinn von verhallen, vertönen, verschallen, etc., wo dann ferlüdt = vertönt, ausgetönt, etc., u. so still, todt, verstorben, weg, etc., wäre (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb. d. ostfries. Spr. i, 455); and of much less probable influence:

(ii) E. Fris. ferlütjen, ferlütjern, verkleinern, verkleinern, kleiner machen, etc. (Doornkaat-Koolman, op. et loc. cit.);

(iii) W. Flem. verlutsen "perdre" in zijne tijd verlutsen, zijne geld verlutsen (De Bo, Westvlaamsch Idioticon, 1104); from Dutch and Flemish lutsen "to waste one's time" (cf. Dutch leuteren, Engl. to loiter).

107. — Blois frenouiller.

See note 58 on *fernailler*³.

108. — O. Fr. fresillant.

See note 64 on fersiller.

109. — O. Fr. fressanger.

See note 31 on farsinguer.

110. — Mid. Fr. fretailleur "to cut up or divide, (of stuffs) to slash"; Berry fretailleur "to strike".

God., iv, 99, has a single example of the verb fortailleur "tailler trop abondamment":

1386 Arch., MM 31, fo 13 vo: "Senz iceulz prez, eaues, ne bos fortailleur ne desroïier fors que a droite taille ne roie...".

The translation "tailler abondamment" is not a good one, since the noun-objects of fortailler are prez, eaues, bos, and I would rather interpret by "to cut up, to divide".

So in the single example of fortailleresse given by God., iv, 99 :

c. 1330 G. de Deguilleville, Trois Pèlerinages, fo 64^d, Impr. Instit. : "Et une borgne cousturiere Fortailleresse parmentiere...", the translation : "qui taille mal" is not the right one ; the word fortailleresse used in conjunction with cousturiere and parmentiere must be taken to refer to a woman whose work was to cut up or slash stuff, cf. Fr. déchiqúeter properly "to cut pieces out of" and it is worth while noting the following gloss :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : "Versnijden, versnipperen, deschiqúeter, découper, couper menu et entièrement".

God. gives two examples of fretailier where it clearly means "to slash (stuffs)" :

p. 1500 Nef des folz, 4^{ro} : "Manteaux divers et fretaillez...".

1584 G. Bouchet, Serées, ed. Roybet, i, 203 : "le feu se print à sa chemise, qui estoit toute fretaillee de filets...".

Cotgrave explains : chemise fretaillee de filets by "a shirt, or smock wrought in frets about the skirts" and the word fretailié by "cut, hakt, notcht, jagged". Two verbal substantives of fretailier are attested, each in one text only :

(a) 1611 Cotgrave : "Fretail de perles. Refuse, or ragged pearles ; pearls of small value".

(b) xvth c. Arch. Vienne, Trinité, liasse 19 (God.) : "A Johan Babilhon, draper, lxxv. s. pour une aune et un tiers de brunete necessaire pour faire les fretailles de la dite huque".

Fretaille is a "slashing", and fretailles de la huque may be compared with manteaux fretaillez above ; the translation "support" given by God. is not understandable and should be rejected. Further, fretaille, in the following passage :

1587 Cholieres, Apresdinees, ed. Libr. des bibliophiles, 71 : "Ceux... qui y ont eu commandement... estiment que ceux auxquels ils ont affaire, soient leurs gouges, goujats et telle fretaille", is also probably a verbal substantive of fretailier ; the meaning in the passage is "small fry, riff-raff" and this figurative sense is perhaps derived from "fragment" and so from the verbal sense of "to cut up or divide".

The verb fretailleur has survived in Berry :

1856 Jaubert, Gloss. du Centre, i, 460 : "Fretailleur, v. a. frapper".

The meaning "frapper" derives no doubt from "to cut, to hack" (cf. the relations between coup and couper).

111. — French frétiller.

DG, 1120 :

FRÉTILLER. — V. intr.

[ÉTYM. Origine incertaine ; peut-être onomatopée. — XIV^e s. Crier fretiller n'i valut, Renart le contrefait, dans GODEF., Compl. — || S'agiter par petits mouvements rapides.

GEW, 441 :

"FRÉTILLER "Zappeln" 14. Jhdt., ist mit Suffixwechsel aus afrz. fresteler umgestaltet, dieses "Lärm machen", dann "mit grossem Lärm gallopiieren", "sich abzappeln" u. ä. ; es bedeutet ursprünglich "auf der Schalmei spielen" d. i. Abl. von afrz. freste "Schalmei", "Art Flöte", dieses vorhistorische Abl. von afrz. freste "Rohrpfife" aus lat. fistula dass. ; vgl. fèle, ZRP, xli, 638.

Zu afrz. freter* "reiben", s. frotter, Spitzer, AR, vii, 390 anm. ist schon deshalb unmöglich, weil es ein afrz. freter* "reiben" nicht gibt".

On a fourth etymology which has been proposed for frétiller, Sainéan, Sources indigènes, i, 2 says :

"Pour l'origine d'un vocable, probablement onomatopéique, comme frétiller, Scheler propose ce triple type latin : "Soit d'un verbe latin fritillare, secouer, supposé par Saumaise sur la base du subst. fritillus, cornet à dés ; soit de frictillare*, dérivé supposé de fricture, fréquentatif de fricare, frotter ; soit enfin du baslatin fritillare, piler du poivre dans un mortier (fritillum), à cause du mouvement de va-et-vient du pilon". Si ce sont là des "résultats de la science moderne", avouons franchement qu'ils ne diffèrent point de ceux de l'époque de Ménage".

I begin by pointing out that frétiller is attested before the xivth century :

c. 1159 (?) Richeut, ed. Romanic Review, 1127 : "San[sonez] d'angoisse fretille...".

Then, so far as the meaning is concerned, frétiller is said particularly of cases of moving when the moving is from the ground, in other words when some idea of raising is involved. It is said of worms, of eels, of serpents, etc. ; cf. Gérard de Nerval in Besche- relle, s. v. frétiller : “ Les caméléons, les salamandres, les lézards frétilaient parmi les rochers ”, or again of the movements of a fish that has fallen to the ground : “ Cette carpe était bien en vie, elle frétille encore ”. It is said in reference to various parts of the body : les pieds lui frétilent, la langue lui frétille ; of a dog's tail when he raises and wags it : frétiller de la queue ; of wings :

1582 Gauchet, Plaisir des Champs, 167 : “ Tel leve en haut le bec, tel fertillant des ailes, En vain va debattant ses esclaves aisselles... ”.

(Cf. slang frétiller “ danser ” and frétilante “ tail ”). Some of the translations given by Cotgrave :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : “ Fretiller, to move, wag, stirre often, stand on no ground ; to wriggle, frig, tickle, itch, lust to be at it ” suggest the restlessness, the effort to be up and doing which are implied in this verb. Cf.

1750 Ménage, Dict. étym., ed. 1750, ii, 543 : “ Se trémousser, c'est proprement fertiller, ne pouvoir demeurer en repos ”.

As I have already said frétiller is found in Richeut, and although the date 1159 which has been assigned to that text from a supposed allusion to the siege of Toulouse in that year is very doubtful, there is no doubt that the poem is of the xiith century. I should propose to derive frétiller from a Frankish verb *FER-TILLAN based on the following :

(1) 1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : “ Tillen, heffen, lever... Tilbargoedt, tilbaerhave, ustensiles, meubles ”.

1730 Marin, Grand Dict. holl.-franç., 875 : “ Til, action d'élever ; tillen, lever de terre, soulever ” ; cf. 947 ; “ Vertillen, zie Optillen en Tillen ” ; cf. 691 : “ Optillen, lever de terre, hausser ”.

(2) E. Fris. fer-tillen “ verheben, von der Stelle heben ; (sich) durch Heben verletzen oder einen Schaden zuziehen ”. Cf. O. Fris. tilla “ lever ”.

A certain number of remarks may be added on the evidence afforded by dialect dictionaries :

(i) The Germanic verb is transitive whereas in French frétiller is intransitive. But in the dialects frétiller occurs as a transitive :

1867 Vermesse, Dict. du pat. de la Flandre française, 240 : “ Fertiller. v. n. Frétiller. I fertile comme un vier.

In veyant ses tours, même eun' biêt' feroce

F'rot fertiller s'queue in marque d'plaisi.

LA DESROUSSEAUX, Le poisson d'avril.

1878 De Chambure, Gl. du Morvan, 352 : “ En français frétiller exprime une action purement physique. Chez nous, feurteiller se prend dans une acception de blâme ou de moquerie et sous-entend qu'on s'agite mal à propos. On emploie quelquefois le mot avec le sens actif pour “ agiter vivement, chiffonner, froisser... ”.

(ii) The dialects show the existence by the side of fertiliser, fertillement, of parallel forms with initial v :

1372 Le livre du chevalier de la Tour Landry, Bibl. Elzév., 27 : “ Et ainsi celle qui avoit la meilleure et la plus seure maniere, fut royne d'Angleterre, et l'ainsee fut refusee pour le vertillement et legiereté de son visaige et pour son resgard qui estoit un peu vertilleux... ”. Le chevalier de la Tour Landry was a Poitevin.

1625-1627 La Muse Normande, ed. Héron, i, 47 : “ Mais pour votre petiot, il est sain et dispos, Vretillant et replet et d'une imeur viouge... ”. — Cf. ii, 79, the indicative present vretille.

1856 Jaubert, Gloss. du Centre, iii, 432 : “ Verdiller, vertiller, v. n. frétiller, remuer sans cesse... Verdillon, vertillon, vertillou, s. m., personne agitée, qui verdille ”.

1867 Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 348 : “ Vertiller, v. n. Frétiller ”.

(iii) The dialects have also forms with d for t like the Berry forms just quoted : cf. Boulogne verdiller “ s'agiter, remuer vivement ” (Haigneré, 612); B.-Maine verdiller “ vétiller, s'amuser à des bagatelles ”, verdille “ vétille, bagatelle ”, verdillon “ individu remuant, pétulant ” (Dottin, 519); Anjou verdeiller “ remuer sans cesse, frétiller ” (Verrier-Onillon, ii, 316).

An interesting use of vertiller :

1587 L. Joubert, Erreurs pop., ed. 1587, 1^{re} partie, v, 5 : “ les tettes commencent à s'enfler et vertiller, lorsque le sang menstrual commence à dilater les veines de la matrice ” has been noted by Cotgrave :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : “ Vertiller, To swell, or increase, as women's breasts doe when the matricall veines are stretched by the menstrual blood ”.

112. — Middle French fretouiller.

The earliest example of the form fretouiller is given by God. :

1541 Le banquet des chambrières fait aux étuves, in Anc. poés. franç., Bibl. Elz., ii, 295 : “ Quand je manie cette andouille, Il m'est avis qu'on m'en fretouille, Le gout me monte jusqu'au cœur ”.

God. translates fretouiller in this example by “ faire frétiller ”.

Fretouiller is noted neither by Cotgrave nor by the larger modern French dictionaries. The dialect dictionaries treat the word as follows :

1903 Haigneré, Vocab. du pat. boulonnais, 265 : “ Fertouiller, v. n. frétiller, ressentir un violent désir de faire quelque chose. D’après le Glossaire de M. l’abbé Corblet, le picard emploie ce mot dans un sens actif qui est inconnu ici ”.

1851 Corblet, Gloss. pic., 457 : “ Fertouiller, remuer, tripoter, barboter ”.

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 205 : “ Ferdoulier, agiter l’eau comme font les enfants pour s’amuser. M. Quivy explique ce mot par être gênant par excès d’ampleur ”.

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 199 : “ Fertouiller, bruire (Argentré) ”.

1856 Jaubert, Gloss. du Centre, i, 459 : “ Fertouiller, v. n. (de frétiller). Remuer l’eau en faisant un léger bruit ”.

At Boulogne fertouiller has the meaning of frétiller. The influence of frétiller is seen again in Jaubert’s contribution. The meaning “ remuer, agiter ” is the most constant and that of “ bruire ” seems secondary.

On the other hand the verb touiller means “ agiter, remuer pour mêler ” and is particularly said of liquids like fretouiller so that one may ask oneself whether fretouiller, fertouiller is not decomposable into fre-, fer- + touiller. And on the whole that appears to me the more satisfactory solution.

With fertouiller will go Morvan en feurtou, être en feurtou “ poursuivre, rechercher quelque chose avec agitation, inquiétude ”. It seems too that it is quite possible that we have the same verb in O. Fr. vertouiller :

xiiith c. Du fevre de Creil, in Fabliaux, ed. Montaiglon, i, 435 : “ Quant li vallés ot la promesse Si trait le vit, dont une asnesse Peüst bien estre vertoil- lie... ”.

a. 1328 Chr. Legouais, Fables d’Ovide in God. : “ Entre .ii. roches par le vis Me court l’eve qui tout me moille Tant me destort, tant me vertoille ”.

God. translates vertouiller in the second passage by “ faire tourner de côté et d’autre ”, as he is under the impression that vertouiller derives from L. vertere, but the sense of “ agiter, remuer ” seems quite satisfactory for both these passages as well as for the 1541 example of fretouiller. So in Girard de Roussillon, ed. Mignard, 3443 :

“ Et si c’est la meniere de felon orguoilloux Que con plus le prion plus se fait vertoilloux ”, the meaning "remuant, agité, violent" is acceptable.

Various examples are quoted by God.

118. — Walloon furlanguer.

See note 47 on ferlanguer.

119. — Walloon furlop, furlor "spirits".

SOURCE :

1880 Grandgagnage, Dict. étym., ii, 527 : "Furlor (esprit de vin). Lob. ; Villers : furlop (esprit de genièvre)".

Furlop is from Malmédy (Villers in 1793) and furlor from Verriers (Lobel in 1854). Neither form is quoted for Liège by Forir.

Although these forms are quoted from the extreme East of the Walloon area, they do not correspond to High German words, but to Dutch and Flemish verloopen, verloren and refer perhaps to the volatility of alcoholic liquor. De Bo, Westvlaamsch Idioticon, 1104 says of verloopen : "Wordt ook gez. van dranken die kracht en smaak verliezen door't lang loopen. Verloopen bier of azijn (die van de kraan afleekt, of wel die men van een ton aftapt sedert lang aan't loopen). Verloopen kaffie (kaffie van de tweede of derde geut)".

Cf. :

1762 Savary des Bruslons, Dict. du Comm., iv, 1177. “ Verloopt. Les Hollandois appellent ainsi les meilleures eaux-de-vie de France qu'ils nomment aussi eaux-de-vie de trois quints ou de trois cinquièmes... ”; iv, 1256 : “ Voorloop. C'est le nom que les Hollandois donnent également, et à l'eau-de-vie rectifiée, et à l'esprit de vin, suivant le génie de leur langue. Ce mot est composé d'une préposition et d'un verbe au présent. Il signifie tout entier proprement avant-coureur, parce qu'en rectifiant, par la distillation, l'eau-de-vie, ou en faisant de l'esprit-de-vin, cet esprit sort toujours le premier, ou avant le phlegme qui ne sort jamais que le dernier dans cette distillation. M. Savary l'a mal nommé, en lui donnant le nom de verloopt. Ce mot signifieroit, s'il étoit d'usage chez les Hollandois, mauvaise eau-de-vie, dans laquelle on a fait distiller le phlegme à force de pousser le feu jusqu'à la dernière goutte d'humidité, ce qui en gâte le goût entièrement ”.

120. — Walloon furlozer.

J. Haust, Étym. wall. et franç. (1923), 97 proposes to explain Walloon forlozer, furlozer “ to squander ” by Flemish waerloosen “ to neglect ”, rejecting the explanation given by Grandgagnage, Dict. étym., i, 215 (and accepted by Behrens, Beiträge, 265), by O. Sax. farliosan, forleosan.

The explanation by waerloosen is satisfactory neither from the phonetic nor from the semantic side.

For-, fur- in Walloon points to a verb containing the equivalent Dutch and Flemish ver-. In a large number of words containing ver-, the idea of “ spending, wasting ” is found (see note 47 on ferlanguer, furlanguer).

Haust is no doubt right in insisting on the phonetic difficulties raised by Grandgagnage's proposal, considering that O. Sax. farliosan, forleosan corresponds to Mod. Dutch verliesen and that A. Sax. leosan in for-leosan has resulted in the archaic English to leese.

Den Schat der duytscher Tale (ed. 1630) gives loosen in the sense of English “ to lose ” as well as English “ to loose ”. To lose corresponds to A. Sax. losian and it appears to me probable that the Walloon furlozer is to be connected with an equivalent form.

121. — Furlucqué.

SOURCE :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : “ † furlucqué : m. ée : f. Searched, ferreted, hunted out ”.

This is the past participle of a verb meaning “ to look for ”. The root of this verb is that dealt with by ML, art. 5102: "Loeken (fläm.) "blicken": wallon. luki, pikard., norm. lüke (> fr. reluquer)".

Den Schat der duytscher Tale (ed. 1630) gives loken "veoir". To such forms as loken, locken correspond Mons louker, loukié, loukie (Sigart, 235), Fr. Flanders relouquer (Vermesse, 440), rouchi erlouquer, relouquer (Hécart 186, 399), Norm. louquer (Duméril, 147). But Norm. luquer and the wide-spread erluquer, reluquer, Geneva relucher, etc., clearly require a Germanic form with u. Den Schat der duytscher Tale gives both loken and luijcken in the sense of "sluyten" i. e. "fermer", and there is reason for supposing another form of the type luijcken for loken "to see".

122. — Norm. furlufer.

Furlufer: 1° intr. "enrager, s'emporter"; 2° réfl. "s'irriter, s'emporter" occurs repeatedly in the Muse Normande (1625-1653). The form frulufier occurs once and frelufier twice (see the Glossaire in Héron's edition, vol. V, 97, 100).

In 1849 the brothers Duméril introduced into the Dict. du patois normand the following:

"Furluché, part. pass. (arr. de Rouen), Hérissé, irrité: Furluchés ainchin que des coqs (Ferrand, Muse Norm., p. 27). Furluffer, v. a. (arr. de Rouen) Fâcher, pousser à bout. Chest pour nous faire furluffer (Ferrand, Muse Norm., p. 26). Peut-être le même mot que le précédent".

Furluché does not occur in Héron's edition; Héron reads "furlufez ainchin que des coqs" (I, 41).

123. — B.-Maine fernailler.

See note 58 on *fernailler*³.

124. — Walloon (Liège) furtoye "remains of meat; pluck, haslet".

J. Haust, Étym. wall. et franç. (1923), 103 considers this word as equivalent to a French fretouille; cf. note 112.

125. — Picard fustiker "to cheat (at games)".

See note 33 on faustriquer.

126. — Poitou vargayer "to totter, to stagger".

SOURCES:

1867 Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 345: "Vargayer, v. n. Jambes qui flageolent par ivresse ou faiblesse".

1868 Lalanne, Gloss. poitevin, 258: " Va[r]gayer, v. n. Chanceler sur ses jambes, vaciller "

Both Favre and Lalanne quote as their source Mademoiselle Clémentine Poey-Davant, of Fontenay (Vendée).

With vargayer goes very probably the substantive vergaie quoted in the form vergaye as the name of a dance by Nicot (1606) and Cotgrave (1611) and of which God. gives one example :

xvith c. Églogue sur le retour de Bacchus, in Anc. poés. franç., ed. Bibl. Elzév., i, 250: " Et d'autre part les vigneronnes frisques Portent au cœur des douleurs nonpareilles, Sans plus danser vergaies ne morisques "

The verb vargayer seems, by its form and by its meaning to be connected with a Germanic FER-WAGAN; cf.

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale: " Waeghe, une balance; waegen, hazarder, aventurer; waggelen, chanceler, vaciller, se tenir pas ferme "

Cf. the Engl. verbs to waw, to wag, to waggle. For the composition cf. German verwagen " hasarder "

127. — French varlope.

It is usually admitted (DG, 2221, GEW, 879) that Fr. varlope "trying plane, jointing plane" is derived from the voorlooper of the Dutch and Flemish dialects, which is attested in the sense of varlope in Dutch and Flemish dictionaries of the xvith and xviith centuries; cf.

1624 Mellema, Gr. dict. franç.-flam.: " Une uuarloppe de menuisier, een voorlooper van een schrijnwercker of een schave "

This explanation however offers many difficulties :

(i) it neglects the early forms (xvth c. uuarlope, GEW; 1564 uuarloppe, Thierry, Dict. franç.-lat. in DG) as well as dialectal warlope attested for Mons (Sigart, 378) and Valenciennes (Hécart, 487);

(ii) it omits to note that vreloper (1546 Rabelais, iii, 1) and vrelope, both attested in the xvth c., are West French forms and that borrowing from Dutch in the xvth and xvith century is out of the question for the West French dialects;

(iii) this leads one to point out that the word varlope occurs in one form or another in all North France and that it is as a dialectal form that it penetrated into the written language; the forms such as they occur in dialect dictionaries are : Saintonge v'rlope (Jonain, 469); Anjou varloupe, verlope with the verb verloper (Verrier-Onillon, ii, 311, 317); Bas-Maine verlope, verloupe with the verb verloper, verlouper (Dottin, 521); Norm. verlope, verloper, verlopure (Moisy, 663) also varlope (Robin, 397); Franche-Montagne veloupe (Grammont, 266), Grand-Combe varloupe (Boillot, 303); Moselle verlope (Zéliqzon, 693);

(iv) the wide distribution of the word varlope, its appearance in the earliest known texts in forms that originate in such different sources as the North Eastern and the Western dialects of France together suggest that the word is much older in these dialects than the period of earliest attestation, i e. the xvth century. Further a study of Germanic borrowings of similar construction rather leads to the belief that the substantive varlope is derived from the verb varloper and not varloper from varlope : cf. farfouil, ferlampe, ferlape, ferlope, feurdale, fourmont, fredon, frelouque, freluche, fressange, vartaupe, verdreque, verglas, vertot, verzin, etc. ;

(v) one must take into consideration the South French forms : Languedoc garlopo and the verb garloupa, and the forms from over the Pyrenees : Catal., Span., Portug. garlopa. It is probable that Rhodian verlopo and Marseille varlopo (and the verb varloupa) are imported from North France. The gar- of Catal., Span., Portug. garlopa prove also that the word has been imported from some French source. But South French garlopo, with the verb garloupa, appears to correspond to an unattested O. Fr. garlope*, garloper*, which with Norm. varlope, verlope, Mons, Valenciennes warlope would require explanation by a Germanic form with initial w ;

(vi) one may then ask oneself whether the Germanic dialects which gave to the plane called varlope names derived from its swift motion (W. Flem. weerlicht in De Bo, 1189; cf. donder in De Bo, 216), and in particular a name derived from the verb loopen (i. e. voorlooper), might not have used other compounds of loopen besides voorloopen and more specially weerloopen, wederloopen, and perhaps verloopen. In many respects weerloopen is semantically just as satisfactory as voorloopen, and phonetically it has over voorloopen the advantage of explaining Mons-Valenciennes warlope, Norm. varlope, verlope, and Languedoc garlopo. One may compare for a compound of weder-, weer- my explanation of Boulogne wadracquer (whence the subst. wadracque) by a form equivalent to Dutch and Flemish weerdragen, wederdragen in ZFSL, iii (1930), 12 ;

(vii) but even if wederloopen solves certain difficulties it does not solve them all. For the forms of the East French dialects (véloupe, varloupe, verlope) and of the West French dialects (varloupe, vreloupe, verlope, verloupe) seem to require verloopen and not wederloopen as their starting-point. Further the Norman forms would be satisfactorily explained by either verloopen or wederloopen.

128. — Anjou, etc., varloupe.

See note 127 on varlope.

129. — Berry, Anjou, Poitou vartaupe, vertaupe, “tumeur, abcess, boil” and Anjou, Maine fertouper, Anjou fortouper.

SOURCES for vartaupe, vertaupe :

1856 Jaubert, Gloss. du Centre, ii, 415 : “Vartaupe, s. f., tumeur qui vient à diverses parties du corps : guérir la vartaupe” ; ii, 426 : “Vertaupe, s. f. (voy. vartaupe)”.

1867 Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 348 : “Vertaupe, s. m., abcès, furoncle”.

1868 Lalanne, Gloss. poitevin, 261 : Vertaupe, s. f., tumeur. Les sorciers, les empiriques, les toucheurs traitent cette maladie. V[ienne], D[eux-Sèvres]”.

1908 Verrier et Onillon, Gloss. de l'Anjou, ii, 311 : “Vartaupe, s. f., abcès, dépôt. De var (ver) et taupe”.

Cf. also :

1875 Laisnel de la Salle, Croyances du Centre de la France, i, 298. “La vertaupe est une affection très connue dans quelques contrées du Berry. On appelle ordinairement de ce nom, tantôt un engorgement glanduleux, tantôt une douleur rhumatismale, tantôt un abcès froid. La vertaupe produit l'effet de taupes qui boutent (poussent) dans l'endroit douloureux. Pour guérir cette maladie, il faut laisser presser la partie malade en plusieurs sens par une personne à laquelle, dans son enfance, on a fait étouffer sept taupes avant qu'elle ait mangé de la soupe à la graisse. Nos paysans admettent sept espèces de taupes et par contre sept variétés de la maladie qu'ils désignent sous le nom de vertaupe. L'enfant, par exemple, qui n'aurait étouffé que trois ou quatre taupes de différentes espèces ne pourrait guérir que trois ou quatre variétés de la maladie”.

It is clear that vartaupe, vertaupe has felt the influence of the word taupe and that it is felt as a compound of var, ver (L. vermis) and taupe (L. talpa). Verrier and Onillon quote an example of the plural vers-taupes. The primitive form must have been vartoupe*, vertoupe* and derived from a verb vertouper*. The meaning of var-taupe is connected with that of palpitation or beating e. g. of the heart, of any troublesome and throbbing part of the body, and the word should be put into relation with the following:

1908 Verrier et Onillon, Gloss. de l'Anjou, ii, 288 : “ Touper (Saumur, Saint-Paul-du-Bois), v. n. Faire ressentir des élancements douloureux. Ex. ça toupe dans mon panaris. Syn de bouter, saquer. || Palpiter, battre, en parlant du cœur. V. toupiner. || (Segré) Gronder avec des paroles véhémentes [1883 Ménière, Gloss. des pat. angev., is referred to for the last meaning].

Toupiner (Saumur, Saint-Paul-du-Bois), v. n. Faire entendre des coups sourds ; battre, palpiter. Ex. le cœur me toupe, c'est comme un cul de paille. Dim. de touper. — Faire tic-tac ; se dit du cœur, des pulsations ”.

Touper which is derived from O. Fr. toup is not attested elsewhere ; but toupiner from toupin is common over all Normandy :

1849 Duméril, Dict. du pat. norm., 207 : “ Toupin, s. m. Sabot, toupie que l'on fait tourner à coups de fouet. — Toupiner. Tourner sur soi-même comme un toupin : le français dit toupiller ”.

1852 Decorde, Dict. du pat. de Bray, 128 : “ Toupiner, tourner à la même place et n'avancer à rien, comme une toupie ”.

1870 Métivier, Dict. franco-norm., 474 : “ Toupin, toupinaïr ”.

1876 Delboulle, Gloss. de la vallée d'Yères, 327 : “ Toupiër, toupiner, v. n. Tourner, s'agiter sur place comme une toupie ”.

1887 Moisy, Dict. du pat. norm., 632 : “ Toupiner se dit aussi au figuré pour aller et venir auprès de son travail, sans vouloir s'en occuper sérieusement ”. Cf. 1656 Oudin, Curios. franç. : “ Toupiër, tourner de côté et d'autre, travailler lentement ”.

The sense of “ whirring or whirling round ” is attested for toupiner as well as toupiër in O. Fr. :

c. 1250 Doon de Mayence, 7519 : “ Si fort le trait a li, puis le va empoignant, Que plus de .c. degrés mesconte en toupinant ”.

Another sense is quoted for W. Normandy :

1913 De Beauhoudrey, Le langage normand de Percy (Manche), 456 : “ Toupiner un arbre : creuser tout autour de la souche et couper les racines jusque par-dessous pour l'abattre ”, which is quite old, as De Beauhoudrey points out :

xiiith c. Coutumier des forêts d'Évreux, ed. L. Delisle, 363 : “ Si les arbres ne sont secs à touspin, c'est assavoir tout autour... ”, and which is particularly important because it is connected, with the meaning “ top ”, in a special way. A toupin which the xiiith century text explains by “ all around ” really means “ top-wise, a-top, like a top ”, the tree, being made by digging round its trunk and cutting its roots, to stand on its tip like a top, so as eventually to topple over.

The meaning of toupiner in Anjou shows a quite different semantic development to that in Normandy. The meaning in Anjou of touper and toupiner appear to develop from the meanings (a) to whip a top, (b) to produce a humming or rumbling sound like a top in motion, whence (i) to produce a dull sound like that of palpitation, etc., (ii) to scold. The form vertouper* is not given in dialect dictionaries; but fertouper occurs in both Maine and Anjou and fortouper in Anjou :

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 199 ; “ Fertouper, chasser avec un bâton, battre ”.

1908 Verrier et Onillon, Gloss. de l'Anjou, i, 386 : “ Fertouper, v. a. frapper dur et longtemps ”. [Source : 1883 Ménière, Gloss. des parlers angevins]. — i, 400 : “ Fortouper, v. a. Crosser ”, and appears to offer meanings deriving from “ to whip a top ”. The existence of fertouper in this isolated way in Maine and Anjou and the probability that vartaupe is from a lost vartouper, vertouper once used in Berry and Poitou points to a very ancient borrowing from Germanic. That Frankish TOPP- in the sense of (1) top, summit, (2) tuft of hair on the top of the head, (3) top (plaything), had been borrowed is of course well known ; not only toup, but toupet, toupie, toupin, toupier, toupiner, etc., occur in O. French. As for Angevin touper, one may note that the Flemish toppen is glossed by Fr. toupier in the 1630 Schat der duytscher Tale. But the survival in the Western dialects of forms like fertouper and vartaupe with the prefix fer- (ver-) is the more remarkable that the corresponding Germanic form vertoppen is not attested in any of the vocabularies to which I have access.

130. — Verduno-Chalonnais vaudru “ to grow thickly (of plants) ”.

SOURCE :

1896 Fertault, Dict. verduno-chalonnais, 443 : “ vaudru, adj., qui pousse vigoureusement, presque avec excès. Se dit des plantes. Bresse vaudru (v. vaudru-ger). *Vaudru*ger, v. intr., pousser dru ”.

Cf.

1859 D. Moñnier, Vocab. de la langue de la Séquanie, 286 : “ Vadru, adj. Qui croit rapidement, tel que le chanvre. Qui va dru (Val. de la Seille) ”.

1896 Richenet, Patois de Petit-Noir (Jura), 222 : “ Terrain vadru, très fertile ”.

The two words vaudruger, vaudru are clearly connected with the French verb druger and the French adjective dru. It seems therefore likely that vaudruger is not derived from vaudru, but rather that vaudru is derived from vaudruger, a compound of dru-ger.

If we compare verduno-chalonnais vorteiller "rouler (quelqu'un) par terre, le battre" (Fertiault, 453) which is for varteiller, verteiller, we may admit that vaudruger, vadruger go back to a dissimilation of vardruger*, verdruger* : cf. Pierrecourt (Haute-Saône) vôdî "verdir", vôdöyî "verdoyer", vôdlâw "verdelet" (Juret, 151); Montbéliard vordjus "verjus", vorlyais "verglas", vorméché "vermisseau" (Contejean, 423); Bournois vôdji "verdir", vôrdju "verjus", etc. (Roussey, 327, 328); Les Fourgs vadaï "verdoyer", vadot "vert" (Tissot, 423).

The French druger "to grow thickly, luxuriantly" represents a form druticare, assured by a gloss in which occurs the compound in druticare; so that if it is accepted that druticare is of Gaulish origin, my hypothesis would suggest that vaudruger represents a compound of a Germanic prefix with a Latinised verb of Gaulish root.

132. — O. N. E. French verbode.

SOURCE :

From the verbod of the Dutch and Flemish dialects : Behrens, Beiträge, 83. Cf. note 87 on fourbot.

133. — French verboquet.

Bescherelle, Dict. Nat., ii, 1935 has :

"VERBOQUET, s. m. Constr. Cordage attaché à un fardeau que l'on élève, soit pour le maintenir et l'empêcher de tourner, soit pour l'empêcher de toucher à quelque saillie ou échafaud. On dit aussi virebouquet", and a little further on (ii, 1938) :

“ VERLOQUET, s. m. Mar. Cordage servant à guider l'extrémité d'une pièce de bois pendant qu'on la hisse à bord ”.

Verloquet is not in the naval dictionaries of Lescallier (1777-1797) and Romme (1792, 1813), and I find it for the first time in the following :

1848 De Bonnefoux & Paris, Dict. de Marine, ed. 1856, i, 730 : “ VERLOQUET, s. m. Directing rope. Cordage faisant fonction de guide, et que l'on amarre à la partie inférieure d'une pièce de bois qu'il s'agit de hisser à bord, pendant la construction d'un bâtiment ou en d'autres cas pareils. Des hommes éloignés du bord font force sur ce cordage pour que la pièce de bois ne soit pas arrêtée par des obstacles ou corps avoisinants, lorsqu'on la hisse ”.

It appears to me as if it were a misprint for verboquet, which is already attested by Félibien :

1676 Félibien, Principes d'archit., 769 : “ VERBOQUET. Quand les charpentiers ont une pièce de bois fort longue à monter, ils l'attachent avec un petit cordage au gros chable, à deux toises environ du halement, pour empêcher le hiement ou ébranlement de la pierre. Cette manière d'attacher avec un petit cordage se nomme verboquet. On s'en sert aussi lorsqu'on monte des colonnes de pierre ou de marbre, ou d'autres grandes pierres ”.

Richelet, Dict., ii (1679), 517 gives verbouquet as well as verboquet and says that verbouquet is in more common usage.

As for virebouquet Boiste seems first to have noted it as tiler's term :

1823 Boiste, Dict. Univ., ii, 328 : “ † Virebouquet, s. m. Cheville pour arrêter la défense, t. de couvreur ”.

1832 Raymond, Dict. Gén., ii, 753 : “ Virebouquet, s. m. Cheville dont les couvreurs se servent pour arrêter la corde attachée à l'amortissement d'une flèche de clocher ”.

Littré gives verboquet and also virbouquet, each with nothing more than a reference to virebouquet (Dict., ii, 2502) which he explains as follows :

“ VIREBOUQUET, s. m. T. de constr. Cordage attaché à un fardeau que l'on élève, pour le maintenir et l'empêcher de tourner. || T. de charpenterie. Nom des cordages servant à lier les pièces au câble d'un engin ”.

Here Boiste and Raymond's virebouquet which was a peg, “ une cheville ”, has become a rope, “ un cordage ”. On the other hand, Bescherelle, Dict. Nat., ii, 1972 gives virebouquet with nothing but a reference to verboquet and virbouquet; but whereas he explains verboquet as a rope, virbouquet is defined almost word for word as Raymond's virebouquet.

I have no means of checking Littré's identification of virebouquet with verboquet and verbouquet. The spelling virbouquet occurs before him (1842 Compl. du dict. de l'Acad., 1263) but with Raymond's definition of virebouquet ("cheville", etc.) and with a reference back to verboquet.

Two things seem clear enough :

(i) there is no relation between the words here discussed and the South French virobouquet and virabouca :

1884 Mistral, Tresor, ii, 1130 : "Virobouquet, lin. virabriquet, lang., gasc. biro-bouquet, s. m. Bilboquet... V. vira-bouca". Cf. ii, 1129 : "Vira-bouca, rouerg. biro-bouca, v. a. Renverser sur la bouche ou la gueule. Virābouco lou ferrat, renverser le seau. R. vira, bouco";

(ii) the word virebouquet as a name of a rope used for hoisting heavy weights and preventing them from turning cannot be derived from the verb virer "to turn", and if virebouquet is the name of such a rope, it is only so by popular etymology.

The proper names of this rope are the earliest attested : verboquet, verbouquet. They are probably old, but I know of no evidence for them before 1676. They are to be connected with Dutch and Flem. bok "he goat" used as technical term :

1730 Marin, Gr. dict. holland.-franç., 135 : "Bok, chèvre, machine dont on se sert à soulever de grands fardeaux".

Cf. Fr. bouc "poulie garnie de cornes de fer pour faire monter la chaîne qui élève les eaux des puits salants"; Fr. chèvre "machine à élever des fardeaux", etc. The W. Flem. verb bokken is explained by "geboeien, gadieschen, uitharden, Fr. supporter" in De Bo, Westvlaamsch Idioticon, 140.

This verb appears to be a compound of a Germanic verb of the form DINGAN ; cf. Engl. to ding “ 1. To strike or punch violently ; to pound ; (in Scotland) to whip, to beat ; to overcome, to defeat ”. Cf. also E. Fris. denkeln “ klopfen, hämmern, durch Hämmern dünn machen u. schärfen ” (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb. d. ostfriesischen Sprache, i, 291).

136. — Boulogne verdrecque.

SOURCE :

1903 Haigneré, Vocab. du pat. boulonnais, 612 : “ Verdrecque, s. f. délit, transgression, fredaine de jeunesse. — T'as core fait enne verdrecque, ou des verdrecques, aujourd'hui ; je voie cha a ten air ”.

This word appears to be derived from a verb verdrecquer* corresponding to a verdrekken of the Dutch and Flemish dialects, based on drek “ L. merda ”, Middle Dutch dreck. Verdrekken would mean “ to befoul, to dirty ” and the first meaning of the substantive derived from it would be equivalent to Fr. saleté, English dirty trick. Cf. :

Martin-Lienhardt, Wtb. d. elsäss. Mundarten, ii, 750 n. : “ Verdrücken : 1. Mit Schmutz besudeln ; 2. refl. seinen guten Ruf usw. beflecken ”.

This word appears to be quite isolated so that comparison with other forms and meanings cannot help to a solution.

139. — French verglas “glazed frost, frozen rain, coating of smooth and very slippery ice”, and the verb verglasser.

DG, 2230 :

VERGLAS, s. m.

[ETYM. Subst. verbal de l'anc. verbe verglacier, verreglacier, composé de glacer et d'un premier élément qui paraît être d'origine germanique. — xiii^e-xiii^e Qui fes as riches verglaz Por els fere verreglacier, HÉLINAND, Vers de la Mort, dans GODEF., verreglacier. || Pluie glacée qui se congèle sur le sol en couche mince et glissante.

Jhdt. die Abl. verreglacier “auf dem Glatteis fallen”.

It is clear that we must admit the influence, by popular etymology, of : (i) Fr. voirre, verre (< L. vitrum) seen in the xiith century verreglaz, verreglacier of Hélinand's Vers de la Mort; (ii) Fr. glace (< spoken Latin *GLACIA for Cl. L. glaciem) seen in the surd sibilant of the verb verglasser, but such a type as vitriglacium* is to be rejected in favour of a Germanic FIR-GLASAN : cf. Dutch verglasen, E. Fris. ferglasen, Germ. verglasen “1. se vitrifier, 2. vitrifier, plomber, azurer, vernir, vernisser”. It is the Germanic (Frankish) GLAS- which explains both the influence of L. vitrum and the influence of L. glacies; that of L. vitrum because of its semantic equivalence, that of L. glacies, partly because of phonetic approximation, partly because of semantic influence (since the glassy surface referred to is the glassy surface of ice). The real thing to note is that the starting point of verglacer and verglas is to be found in Germanic GLAS- and not in Latin glacies.

I am inclined to think that some of the senses of the Fr. glacer, those indicated by the DG in its section 3 of the meanings of that verb : “revêtir d'un vernis poli, transparent, qui a l'apparence de la glace” (cf. Engl. to glaze, German glasen, etc.), and also some of the senses of Fr. glace, those given under ii, 1^o by the DG : “glass of a mirror, mirror; glass of a carriage door”, are due to Germanic GLAS- and not to Latin glacies and it would be interesting to put together texts which would tend to clear up their history.

One must bear in mind the following points :

(i) Legonidec, Dict. celto-breton (1821), 281 gives Breton houl, s. m. “ houle, flot, lame ” whence boulenn (pl. boulennou, houl) “ une seule houle, une seule vague ”, and the verb boulenna “ former des houles, des vagues, en parlant de la mer, ondoyer ”. These words are by the author marked with a star and a note of interrogation to indicate his ignorance of their origin. They are omitted in Henry’s Lexique étymologique du breton moderne (1900). Nothing corresponding to Breton houl is to be found in Cornish or Welsh, and that word must be considered as borrowed by Breton from the French dialects ;

(ii) Span. olla “ any gulf of seas or rivers in which are whirlpools ; whirlpool ” is merely an attraction, by popular etymology, to Span. olla “ pot ” (< L. olla) of Span ola “ 1. wave, wave raised above the level of the surface, 2. a sudden violent commotion ” ; cf. Span. olage “ succession of waves ”, oleada “ surge, swell of the sea ” ; and Span. ola is the same word as and probably borrowed from, French houle, oule ;

(iii) Of the two French forms houle, oule, the first attested is houle (1552 Rabelais, iv, 20 houille). Houle is properly “ the hollow between the crests of two waves ”, then “ waves of a stormy sea ”. With houle in its first sense of “ hole, hollow ” may be compared : Sth French oulo “ creux de rocher ” ; houlette de connil “ rabbit hole ” (1596 Hulsius, 1611 Cotgrave), still used in Normandy according to Fleury, Ess. s. le patois de la Hague ; Maine houle “ cavité sous la racine des arbres, au bord de l'eau ", houler " se dit soit du poisson qui se cache sous les houles, soit des pêcheurs qui battent l'eau dans ces endroits " (Montesson, 282, also Dottin, 256); La Hague houle " trou, caverne, surtout dans les rochers ", se boulaë, s'aboulaë " se cacher dans une houle " (Fleury); Bessin hôle, houole " creux où se cache le poisson ", s'houlé " se cacher dans un trou " (Joret);

(iv) The facts are all in favour of derivation from a Germanic word with initial h and specifically from a Frankish equivalent of Dutch hol: Middle Dutch hol, adj. " hollow ", hol, subst. " hole "; cf. A. Sax. hol as adj. and subst. Cf.:

1730 Marin, Gr. Dict. holland.-franç., 388: " 'T is een holle zee, de zee is hol. La mer se tourmente fort, est bien émue, agitée. — Een konyne hol, un trou à lapins. — Holen, des creux, des cavernes, antres, cavitez ".

My object in elaborating this explanation of French houle already suggested by Jal and by Behrens in 1902 (ZRPh, xxvi, 652) has been to lead up to the examination of the term verhaule, verhole, verhoule.

SOURCES :

1848 De Bonnefoux et Paris, Dict. de Marine, ed. 1856, i, 729: " Verhole, s. m. Syn. de retour de marée. P. l'expl. voy. au mot retour ". i, 637: " Retour, s. m. (Eddy)... Lorsqu'il est question d'une marée, son retour est le changement de direction du courant de cette marée, en une direction opposée, après un obstacle rencontré par ce courant. Il ne faut pas confondre retour de marée avec retour de la marée... ".

1879 Robin, Dict. du pat. de l'Eure, 401: " Verhaule. — Terme de marine, fort usité à l'embouchure de la Seine: contre-courant, remou. Au moment du flot, il y a le long des quais de Quillebeuf une verhaule favorable à l'appareillage des navires qui s'apprentent à descendre vers le Havre... ".

The form verhoule is to be found in the following text quoted by Delboulle in Romania, xxxv, 420:

1683 Le Cordier, Instruction des Pilotes, ed. 1761, p. 58: " La verhoule, c'est à dire la marée qui sort de la riviere de Seine... ".

xviii c. Godefroy de Nifriville, in Le Goffic, Morceaux choisis des écrivains havrais, 56: " Cette verhoule admirable qui est inconnue aux autres ports; verhoule qui retient encore son plein lorsque les autres ports de la mesme coste sont à deux tiers de baisse ".

Behrens in ZFSL, xxx, 360, has proposed to connect verhole, verhoule with Dutch verhaal, E. Fris. ferhal " Erholung, Pause ". Now an eddy is " a whirl or backward-circling current of water, a whirlpool " and it is characterised by the " hole or hollow formed by the whirling water ". The form verhoule in particular is against connection with Dutch verhaal; and it will be noted that verhole, verhoule correspond very satisfactorily with hole, houle " hole " quoted for La Hague and Bessin by Fleury and Joret. I should therefore propose to consider verhole, verhoule as a substantive meaning " hollow, hollowing " derived from a verb verhouler* " to hollow ". Cf. Dutch holen " caver, excaver " in the 1630 Schat der duytscher Tale; and for the compound German verhoblene Flut " marée faible "; finally E. Fris. ferhâlen, ferhâlen " verhohlen, verborgen, versteckt, etc. " (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb. d. ostfries. Spr., i, 448).

141. — Fr. verker, verquair.

This word is not in Littré. Bescherelle, Dict. Nat., ii, 1939: VERKER, s. m. Jeux. Sorte de trictrac allemand introduit en France sous la régence. On l'appelle aussi " backgammon ". — The word is noted by Marin:

1728 Marin, Gr. Dict. franç.-holland., 1177: " VERKER, m. Lisez verquair, c'est le nom d'un jeu de trictrac fort commun en Allemagne et en Hollande, ainsi nommé de verkeeren " changer ", à cause des révolutions continuelles pour et contre dont il est varié. VERKEEREN. Jouer une partie au verker ".

1730 Marin, Gr. Dict. holland.-franç., 932: " VERKEERBOORD, n. Damier, un tablier sur lequel on joue une sorte de trictrac inusité en France ".

The NED supposes, with probability, that the English form verquere, the only one attested as a name of the game, is borrowed from an unattested French verquere (cf. Marin's verquair above). The same authority gives three examples of verquere of a. 1700, 1714 and 1721, of which the first is favorable to the view that the name of the game came from Dutch rather than from German:

a. 1700 Games most in use, 50: " The famous game called verquere, came originally . . . from Holland, and is said to be the only noted game, upon the tables, that they practise and are good at ".

The passage also encourages one to think that the name of this game became known to the French in the second half of the xviiith century, at the time of the wars in the Netherlands. In the following extract, in which Parival speaks of the games played in Holland:

a. 1678 [Parival], Les delices de la Hollande, dernière édition (1678), p. 283: Revue de linguistique romane.

“ J’oubliais à vous dire que l’on joue au billard..., qu’on y trouve des jeux de quille, de courte boule, de paume, d’eschets, de cartes, de trictrac... ”, there is a probable reference to verquere, but it is the French word trictrac that is used.

On the other hand the game and its probably Dutch name are clearly given by Richelet :

1680 Richelet, Dict., i, 84 : “ Verker, s. m. Monsieur Arnell, gentilhomme suédois... m’a assuré que le mot de verker venoit de l’allemand verkehren qui signifie changer, tourner. Le verker est une sorte de jeu auquel on joue sur un trictrac avec des dames et des dez. C’est en un mot une manière de trictrac allemand où l’on joue depuis quelques années en France dans les Académies, et dans les maisons particulières ”.

This note on verker is of course given in order to get as exhaustive a list of words containing Germanic fer- as possible. Verker is of course a relatively recent borrowing. A. Thomas has quoted the oldest known instance of its use in Mélanges d’étymologie française, 130 :

1656-8 Journ. de voyage de deux jeunes Hollandais à Paris, ed. Marillier, 196 : “ Nous y passâmes toute l’apresdinée à jouer au verkier des fraises et des cerises ”.

142. — Moselle verlater.

1924 L. Zéliqzon, Dict. des pat. romans de la Moselle, 693.

Verlater seems to be the Dutch and Flemish verlaten “ délaissé (i. e. son travail) ”.

Se rouler à terre, se vautrer. — Se terrasser, se rouler réciproquement à terre... ”.

148. — French vermiller “(of the boar) to root”, vermillonner “(of the badger) to root”, Jura varmouiller “to eat like a pig”, Bresse louhannaise vremouilli “to root about (like a pig)”.

1842 Compl. du Dict. de l'Acad., 1354 : “ Vermillage, s. m. (anc. cout.). Droit qu'on payait afin que les cochons puissent fouiller dans une forêt ”.

The verb vermiller is known to us from the second half of the xivth century. Besides the instance from Gaston Phébus' work on cynegetics, two others are to be found in the works of Eustache Deschamps, ed. SATF, ii, 57, iii, 58. In these three cases the verb appears as vermillier. Later a form vermeiller occurs in the Dict. de l'Académie in 1694 and with it will go a verbal substantive vermeil attested earlier than the verb :

c 1378 Modus ap. La Curne de Sainte-Palaye : " L'autre maniere de menjues ou le sanglier et les bestes noires vont mengier est appellé vermeil ".

In addition to vermillage " due paid for allowing pigs to root in a forest " given above, we have in a text of 1366 vermillage with the notable variant vermullage with the meaning of " act of rooting (by pigs) " or " rooting ground (for pigs) " :

1366 Arch., JJ 97, pièce 305 (Ducange vermileus) : " Si ont pasturage en la dite forest [de Lonbouel] et es metes d'icelle pour leurs bestes, pannage et vermullage pour leurs pors, quand pannage y a, par payant pour chascun porc un denier pour le dit pannage et pour chascun maile pour le dit vermullage. Chascun d'eulx est accoustumé prendre et avoir . . . le boy vert en gesant . . . Pour chascun porc pour le vermillage avoir en la dite forest, une maille aus sergenz d'icelle ".

To these historical data must now be added the information derived from modern dictionaries of dialect :

1859 D. Monnier, Vocab. de la Séquanie, in Ann. du Dépt du Jura, 2^e s., xx^e ann., 287 : " Varmouiller, v. n. Manger comme un cochon. Le porc varmouille en agitant avec son groin ses aliments liquides ".

1894-1902 L. Guillemaut, Dict. pat. de la Bresse loubanaise, p. 329 : " Vremouilli, se dit des cochons qui fouillent la terre avec leur groin : " Les pouas ont tout vremouilli le pré ".

Cf. also perhaps :

1878 Chambure, Gloss. du Morvan, 385 : " Frimouille, s. f. frimoasse, figure, visage ".

In the investigation of the etymology of this series, we must get rid of the idea that the Fr. vermiller is derived from the L. vermis. I do not think that there is, apart from the initial v, any marked trace of influence of popular etymology from that Latin word. In the following definition :

1611 Cotgrave : " Vermiller. To worme, or root for wormes ".

Cotgrave is merely reproducing a book etymology due to the initial verm- of vermiller. Vermiller invariably refers in early instances to the wild boar and the pig ; the boar does not root for worms, it roots for roots, and an expert will even indicate particular roots :

1655 Salnove, Venerie royale, ed. 1872, Dict. des Chasseurs, xxxvii : " Vermil- ler, c'est quand les bestes noires suivent avec le bout du nez ou boutoy la trace des mulots pour dénicher leur magasin. " Again, p. 353 : " Les mangeures qui luy plairont le plus, qui sont les bledz et bien que verds... il ne laisse pas de les pasturer, fouiller et vermiller y mangeant des racines de chiendent, de pissenlis, de bassinets, de naveaux sauvages et de senez... ".

So in reference to vermillonner, it may be added that the food of the badger consists of roots, earth nuts, fruit, the young of birds, insects, reptiles and small quadrupeds.

Properly speaking vermiller indicates the action of the boar's snout, as it uses it for rooting into the ground for his food. The root of vermiller is to be found in a Germanic form corresponding to Middle Dutch and Flemish muyl " boar or pig's snout " for earlier MUL- (cf. German maul) :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : " Muyl, verekens muyl, cal ou groin de pourceau ; † muylen, rechigner, faire la moue ; vermuylen, faire le rechignard, le desdaigneux ou le despitieux, avoir chevre, faire la moue comme les enfants apres qu'ils sont battus : vermuylen syn eten ne manger pas par un despit, se desdaigner de manger ".

The meaning of vermuylen is " to pout, to push forward the lips, the mouth, so as to make it like a pig's snout ". In form the Middle French vermiller corresponds then to Middle Dutch and Flemish vermuylen. The Middle French vermillier suggests that the original infinitive suffix was -IARE for a Germanic -jan, so that we might suppose such a form as FER-MUL-JAN as the starting point. From it we should expect an Old French vermuillier and I take it that such was the Old French form. If my view is correct, the vermullage of the text of 1366 given above alone preserves the u of the Germanic root. The change from vermuillier to vermiller is normal enough. The ou of the dialectal forms given above appears to show the influence of mouiller.

149. — French vermoulu " worm eaten, worm holed, etc., crumbling to dust ".

DG, 2232 :

VERMOULU, UE, adj.

[ETYM. Composé avec ver et moulu, part. de moudre. — xiii^e s. Fust de pressoir viés ou vermoulu. BEAUMAN. 1141 Salmon || Piqué, mangé par les vers. Bois vermoulu.

GEW, 885 :

VERMOULER, refl. " Wurmstichig werden " 17./18. Jhdt., ist Rückbildung von vermoulu "wurmstichig", 13. Jhdt., wörtlich "von Würmern zermahlen, zermalm", d. i. alte Zusammensetzung von ver "Wurm" und moulu, d. i. Part. von moudre "mahlen" s. d.; von vermoulu seit dem 13. Jhdt. die Abl. vermoulure "Wurmfrass". REW 9231.

The DG and GEW look upon vermoulu as a compound of the maintenir, colporter type. As the word is necessarily of early formation, it is right to note that no Latin ver mi-molere* is attested, that outside France such a combination is suggested by no Neo-Latin dialect, and that, so far as the French dialects are concerned, if Germanic offers a form that will explain the French vermoulu the hypothesis ver mi-molere ceases to have any raison d'être.

In the French vermoulu, it is not easy to say whether the root idea is "worm" or "dust". Taking the idea "worm" first, Germanic has certain compounds of the prefix fer- (ver-) and the word meaning "worm"; cf. :

1630 Den Schat der duytschē Tale : " Verwormen, se vermouliir, devenir véreux ; verwormt, vermoulu, véreux ; een verwormde note, une noix véreuse ; verworminghe, verwormicheyt, vermoullissure".

Here verwormen is formed like vermotten "to be eaten away by moths" from Middle Dutch motte (Mod. Dutch mot) "moth". So cf. :

1630 Den Schat der duytschen Tale : " vermeluwen, vol meluwen worden, devenir vermoulu comme fromage ; vermeluden Kase fourmage vermoulu... Meluwen, milwe, mites ou mines, petits vers qui naissent es febves, fromages, etc".

The words meluwe, milwe must be compared to O. H. G. milwa (German Milbe "mite, cheese-mite, moth, etc. ").

I do not wish to multiply instances of similar Germanic formations (cf. e. g. E. Fris. fermīten, fermitern in Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb., i, 456) but rather to call attention to the fact that the Middle Flemish past participle vermeluden in vermeluden Kase offers a very satisfactory solution of the u of the French vermoulu, particularly noticeable if, as both the DG and GEW admit, vermoulu is the starting point of the French series : vermoulu, vermoulure, vermouliir, vermoullissure, vermouler — I give them in the order of their earliest attestation in dated texts — and this explanation of vermoulu is rendered convincing by the O. Fr. form vermelu which corresponds sound for sound with the Germanic vermeluden. Vermelu is noted in

God. (Compl.), x, 847 as occurring in Hélinand's Vers de la Mort, but there has been here a confusion with another poem of the same title, and the quotation should read as follows :

xiiith c. Robert le Clerc d'Arras, Vers de la Mort in MS. BN. 375, fo 340^{vo} :
 " Que trop couste a bien retenir Maisons a tous le[s]vermelue "

The e of vermelu has the backing of the following dialectal forms :

(i) Poitou (Vienne) verlemé " piqué de vers " (Lalanne, 259); (ii) Poitou (Vienne, Deux-Sèvres) vermelou " vermoulu " (Lalanne, 259); (iii) H.-Maine vermeleux, se " piqué de vers " (Montesson, 467).

It is not impossible that the ou of vermoulu may also be explained by the influence of a Germanic form. The Germanic dialects are rich in words expressing ideas similar to that in Fr. vermoulu : cf. W. Flem. olm " vermoulure " (De Bo, 664), Brabant olm " een wormken, maaiken, of dierken dat in 't graan zit " (Alg. Vl. Idiot.), E. Fris. fer-ulmen " verfaulen, vermodern, etc. " (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb., i, 470); cf. also W. Flem. vermummelen " se vermouler " (De Bo, 1106), Middle Flem. vermolmen " vermouler " (1630 Den Schat d. duytscher Tale), E. Fris. fer-mulmen " zu Mulm oder Staub werden " (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb., i, 457), German molm, mulm " gravois en forme de poussière, poussière de bois pourri, (du bois) pourriture, vermoulure ", molmen mulmen " réduire en poussière " (cf. zermalmen). Particularly interesting is Dutch mul translated by " turf-molm " in Vercoullie, Etym. Wdb. (1925), 235 and by " moilon, le déchet de petites pieces de tourbes " in Den Schat der duytscher Tale (1630); cf. German mill, müll " décombres, ordures, gravois, balayures ", O. H. G. mullen " zermalmen ", farmullian, farmullen " zerreiben zu Staub ".

The action, by popular etymology, of Fr. ver " worm " and Fr. moulu past participle of moudre, may then have exercised little, if any influence on either the form or the meaning of French vermoulu. This is the more curious because such an influence would be so natural ; the Fr. verb. mouliner is used of worms reducing wood to dust, and the Germanic words we have quoted in this note are connected with the proto-Germanic verb meaning " to grind " (cf. Gothic malan) and so cognate with L. molere.

For the form veurneûler, cf. Saintonge v'rneuiller “ aller et venir pour rien à peu près ” (Jonain, 410) and see note 170 on vreniller.

Verneûler, vernauler “ to loaf about without any object, to waste one's time ” are to be brought into relation with the forms fernouiller, frenouiller, etc., discussed in note 58 on *fernailler*³; just as Saintonge, Poitou vreniller, etc. “ to loaf about without any object ” are to be brought into relation with ferniller, fourniller, etc., discussed in the same note; the original sense is “ fureter ”, then “ far-fouiller ”.

See note 141 on verker.

153. — Orléans vertaper.

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : “ Vertaper. To stop with a bung. ¶ Orléan. ”.

This verb is not, to my knowledge, attested elsewhere, but it is clearly connected with the simple form in French taper “ 1. to strike, hit, slap, etc., 2. to stop, to plug, etc. ” which is derived from a Germanic TAPP.

One may compare for the compound verb :

(i) 1630 Den Schit der duytscher Tale : “ Vertappen, tirer d'un vaisseau à l'autre ”; 1730 Marin, Gr. Dict. holl.-franç., 947 : “ Vertappen, v. a. Hy vertapt veel bier. Il vend beaucoup de bière au pot, en détail ”.

(ii) German verzapfen in 1° Er hat heute ein ganzes Fass verzapft, he has sold to day a whole barrelful from the tap; 2° Ein Stück Holz verzapfen, to mortise a piece of wood.

154. — Middle Fr. vertigné “ moth-eaten ”.

Our source is :

1611 Cotgrave, Dict. : “ † Vertigné : m. ée : f. Worme-eaten ”.

The root-word is L. tinea. Vertigné is no doubt formed on such a type as Dutch and Flemish vermotten “ moth-eaten ”. For the formation by a Germanic prefix with a word of Latin origin see the references at note 38 on O. Fr. ferarmer and note 147 on W. Fr. verluter.

155. — Poitou, Centre vertiller, Norm. vretiller, etc.

See note 111 on fretiller.

156. — O. French vertoquer "to strike a spigot into a cask".

We owe to Ducange the knowledge of the only example of the O. Fr. vertoquer :

1387 Arch., JJ 132, pièce 5 : "Ainsi que Jehan le Normant feust pres d'une queue que appareilloit et vertoquoit Gillet tonnelier...".

It may be translated : "As Jehan le Normand was near a cask that Gillet the cooper was putting right and into which he was fixing a spigot...". Properly speaking vertoquer is "to strike the spigot into the cask, to fix the spigot into the bunghole of the cask by striking with a hammer or otherwise" and the word is to be put into relation with the French toquer "to strike, to hit, to knock, to beat, etc.", with Picard doquer "to strike", French doguer "to butt" (cf. vertaper of note 153 and Fr. taper); one may read the valuable contribution of Behrens, Beiträge zur französischen Wortgeschichte und Grammatik, pp. 80-81, on the relation of these words with tokken, dokken of the Flemish and Dutch dialects.

The following extracts :

1867 Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 161 : "Fretoc, s. m. Piège à rat".

1869 Jonain, Gloss. saintongeais, 185 : "F'rtic f'rtoc, imitation du bruit de la pierre aiguisant la faux... f'rtoc, gros et court bondon à la fonçure d'un tonneau... f'rtoquer, "battre, rosser..."

show that the verb vertoquer in a form fertoquer has existed in Poitou and still exists in Saintonge and that with it go a substantive fertoc, f'rtoc, with two meanings : (a) "rat-trap", cf. frapeau, s. m. "piège pour prendre les oiseaux : c'est une cage qui se ferme par une détente que fait partir l'oiseau en se posant sur une baguette placée à l'entrée du piège" (Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 159) from the root of frapper; (b) "short thick spigot fixed in the bottom of the cask". This second meaning occurs over all North and North East

France. For Normandy we find the word with the following variants vertau, verdot, vrétot, vredeau, ferdot, vertot :

1842 Duméril, Dict. du pat. norm., 217 : “ Vertau, s. m. (arr. de Bayeux). Bonde de tonneau... ; ” id., 221 : “ Vredeau, s. m. Fausset, cheville pour donner de l'air aux tonneaux ”.

1852 Decorde, Dict. du pat. de Bray, 132 : “ Verdot, gros fausset qui se met au bas des tonneaux ”.

1879 Robin..., Dict. du pat. de l'Eure, 185 : “ Ferdot, feurdot et quelquefois verdot. — Gros fausset, morceau de bois arrondi qui sert à boucher le trou d'un tonneau et qu'on remplace ordinairement par une chantepleure quand on veut mettre le tonneau en vidange. Le ferdot est de plus grande dimension que la pignette ”.

1887 Moisy, Dict. du pat. norm., 664 : “ Vertot, s. m., gros fausset... L'on prononce quelquefois verdot ou ferdot... En patois normand de Jersey, l'on dit vrétot, par métathèse... ”.

The reduction of original -oc by the loss of final c and the assimilation to such suffixes as -eau, -au, -ot, is old. Cotgrave (1611) has : “ Vertau : m. a stopple, or bung...” and in the following text of 1468 vertail is evidently formed analogically from a plural vertaus :

1468 Stat. in Ducange, art. vertebrum : “ Item, les diz tonneliers ne pourront enfoncer queues neufves sans vertail, jusques a ce qu'elles seront veues et visitees par les maistres esgards ”.

It is of some importance to note that the forms of the North East have initial w- :

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 490 : “ Werteau, sorte de marque qu'on apposait sur les tonneaux après la jauge faite par les préposés du fisc ; il s'appliquait sur le bondon. On donnait ce nom au bondon même...”.

1867 Vermesse, Dict. du pat. de la Flandre franç., 506 : “ Werteau, s. m. marque que le jaugeur sermenté apposait sur les tonneaux après vérification ”.

It seems certain that the starting point for the group of words here discussed is a Frankish *FER-TOKKAN and quite unnecessary to suppose for the explanation of the North-Eastern forms of another form with the prefix WEDER-, WEER-, so that the w of werteau must be considered as due to some analogical influence. It is possible, for example, that the fact that in the North-Eastern dialects the word werteau is particularly used of the mark put by the inspectors of the treasury on the spigot of the cask, and that the meaning “spigot” seems less well known, indicates that the treasury inspectors generally came to the Flemish areas from further West, from Normandy and West Picardy for example where v in certain cases was the equivalent of w in the East Picard and Flemish areas.

To the form vertoquer of the text of 1387 correspond in older texts the Central French vertocher (-aucher, -oucher, -ucher) :

(i) xiiith c. Vie des Pères, in God., art. verroucher “ bâillonner ”; A Thomas, Romania, xxxv, 421 has shown that the right reading vertoucher occurs in two mss of the BN containing the text.

(ii) xiiith c. Antidotaire Nicolas, ed. Dorveaux, 38 : “ Vertochez... vertuchez bien le tonel...”.

(iii) 1320 Text in J. M. Richard, La Comtesse Mahaut, 144 : “ Pour amener les diz xx tonneaux de vins du Crotoi a Hesdin, pour les traire des celiers ou il estoient, pour les vertanchier (read vertauchier)...”.

(iv) 1380 Viandier de Taillevent, ed. Pichon et Vicaire, Suppl., 251 : “ Et ne soit le baston que ung pié dedans le vaissel, et puis le vertochiez...”.

157. — O. Fr. vertouiller.

See note 142 on fretouiller.

158. — Valenciennes vervessou “ sickly, pale ”, Lille vervessou “ phlegmatic fellow ; one that does not seem to enjoy his own jokes ”.

See note 161 on Valenciennes verzouleux.

159. — Walloon verzin.

Grandgagnage, Dict. étym. de la langue wallonne, ii, 463 : “ Verzin (caprice, lubie) N. it. ”

The word is noted by Sigart for Mons :

1866 Sigart, Gloss. montois, 368 : “ Verzin, s. m., idée folle ; caprice subit. Il a passé ein verzin pa s'tiette. Quée verzin est-ce qui vos preind co là ? — Fl. weërzin, répugnance. — Mais verzin est probablement un dérivé de verzeler ”.

Instead of an impossible vervecinus suggested in a note of Grandgagnage's dictionary, Sigart hesitates between two explanations. The explanation first suggested by Sigart appears to have been accepted by J. Haust, an authority on the Walloon dialects ; cf.

1920 Bull. du Dict. Gén. de la langue wallonne, 14 sq. (Étym. wall. et franç., 271) : “ [after proposing to explain the E. Walloon vîrer by OHG widiron]. La dérivation que je propose ci-dessus satisfait pleinement pour le sens. Elle ne fait pas grande difficulté pour la lettre : wideren s'est normalement contracté en wieren* par la chute du d intervocal ; comp. le néerl. weder : weer et l'all. widersinn : bas-all. wiersen (Aix-la-Chapelle), neerl. weërzin (d'où le w. verzin). Le changement de w en v est rare, mais non sans exemple ; comp. a l'avîr, altéré de a l'awîr ; le nam. vèci pour wé-ci* et, ci-après, la fin de l'article vîse. De même le nom de lieu Visé (i long), en flamand Wezet, dérivé de l'all. Wiese, prairie".

In support of Germanic w > Walloon v, a change which he states to be rare, he quotes two instances : (1) Walloon vuse (< O. H. G. visa), a derivation which is highly improbable (cf. Haust, Étym. wall et franç., 278); (2) Walloon verzin (< Dutch weerzin).

Now Dutch and Flemish weerzin is noted neither by Den Schat der duytscher Tale (1630), nor by Marin, in his Grand dictionnaire holland.-français (1730), nor by De Bo, for West Flemish. Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb. d. ostfries. Sprache, iii, 542 gives wër-sin and wër-sinnig and Van Dale, Handwoordenboek d. Nederlandsche Taal, 931, explains Dutch weerzin by "tegenzin". Quite orherwise is it with the verb verzinnen :

1630 Den Schat der duytscher Tale : " Verziunen, controuuer, excogiter ; verzinnen, considérer, penser, cogiter, recogiter, repenser, recorder, remémorer, aviser, appenser, méditer, machiner".

1730 Marin, Gr. dict. holl.-fr., 954 : " Verzinnen, inventer, trouver le premier. — Zig verziunen. Se tromper, se méprendre. — Verzinning. Invention... Bêvue, erreur, méprise".

Verzin is not only an East Walloon word, it is quoted for Mons as well as Liège and it is probably old. Its meanings in the dialects are more naturally explicable by the meanings of verzinnen than by the narrow connotation of weerzin ; and I should therefore be inclined to equate the word with the Old Fr. forsen from forse-ner, and so see in it a substantive derived from a verb equivalent in form and meaning to the Dutch verzinnen.

160. — B.-Maine verzouiller " to fall ".

SOURCE :

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du Bas-Maine, 522 : " Verzouiller, tomber (Bierné)".

This is the only indication on this word known to me. The word is, I suppose, intransitive.

If the meaning is " to fall from overdrinking ", then verzouiller is the same word as the Picard verzouler dealt with in the next note.

161. — Valenciennes verzouleux " drinker of spirits ".

SOURCE :

1834 Hécart, Dict. rouchi, 489 : " Verzouleux, buveur d'eau-de-vie et de liqueurs, qui a le visage bouffi par l'usage des liqueurs spiritueuses, de la couleur blafarde de la peau de ceux qui ont cette dangereuse habitude ”.

Verzouleux implies a verb verzouler “ to drink to excess ” which I should compare to Walloon forsôlé :

1845 Grandgagnage, Dict. étym. de la langue wallonne, i, 216 : “ Forsôlé (verb. : trop soûlé. On traite de forsôléz les hommes ou les animaux qui se conduisent en êtres trop, ou trop bien repus; en conséquence ce mot équivaut à : 1° dégoûté, difficile dans le boire et le manger... ;

2° plus souvent à : dissolu, débauché... ”.

We should then have a verb which was a compound of our Germanic prefix and the Fr. soûler, in other words Walloon forsôler and Valenciennes verzouler would be equivalent to an O. Fr. for-saouler*, foursaouler*. To the family of such a verb may perhaps belong the following words :

(a) arr. de Bayeux velousseux “ paillard ” (Duméril, 216) by metathesis for vessouleux, versouleux ;

(b) ? W. Norman vesou dealt with Duméril, 218 in the following cryptic fashion : “ Vesou, s. m. Jouet, littéralement fou ; du lat. vesanius ; c'est un souvenir des plaisirs du moyen-âge ” ;

(c) Démuin vésoul, s. f. “ femme malpropre qui se tient mal ”, ch'est enne grosse vésoul (Ledieu, 228); vésoul normally vésoule for verzoule ;

(d) Boulogne verzou “ caprice soudain ” (Haigneré, 614);

(e) ?? Walloon vèsou “ pâle, blême, qui a mauvaise mine ” (Grandgagnage, Dict., ii, 465); for the meaning, cf. Hécart's definition of verzouleux above. But then what of Valenciennes vervessou “ qui est d'une faible complexion, qui a la mine pâle, qui a l'air souffrant ” (Hécart, 479), Lille vervessou “ pisse-froid, pince-sans-rire ” (Grandgagnage ad vèsou) ? In this case it looks rather as if vèsou was connected with vesi “ vesser ” ; cf. Valenciennes vessou “ vesseur ” ; in which case vervessou might be derived from an unattested verb vervesser*, a compound of vesser.

162. — Norm. vesillant, vezillant.

See note 64 on fersiller.

163. — B.-Maine veurdonner.

See note 92 on Fr. fredonner.

164. — B.-Maine virbouillon.

SOURCE :

1895 Dottin, Gloss. du B.-Maine, 636 : “ Virbouillon, turbulent, irréfléchi ”.

Is this an alteration of verbouillon formed from the compound of fer- and bouillir referred to in note on fèrbolaye ?

L. Adam, Les Patois lorrains, 253 quotes among the representatives of this verb such forms as ferbeli “ blanchir des légumes ” at La Bresse, frebli “ cuire à moitié ” at Le Tholy, and the substantive frebèlon “ enfant très remuant ” at Allain.

See notes 40, 83.

165. — Fr. virbouquet, virebouquet.

See note 133 on verboquet.

166. — Vrelepingue (Rabelais, iv, 40).

In his Langue de Rabelais, ii, 483, Sainéan, after examining the list of the cooks' names in Rabelais, iv, 40, says :

“ Résidu obscur : Apigratis, Delyqualquain, Escarsaufle, Urelipingues, ce dernier mot burlesque à finale semblable à Albingues ou Myrelingues ”.

Urelipingues corresponds to “ Vrelelipingues in Marty-Laveaux' edition of Rabelais' works, ii, 411. This cook's name has suffered much in various editions, and the current one in les Classiques Garnier gives it as Vrefelipinguet.

Cotgrave has a much simpler form : “ Vrelepingue : a drink spiller. ¶ Rab. ”. His spelling and his translation suggest Dutch and Flemish verlapping. The vre- of vrelepingue (cf. Rabelais' vrelopper, vretaquer) makes one wonder whether the Western dialects had a verb vreleper, vrelaper equivalent to Picard ferlaper, fourelaper.

167. — Poitou vreliard “ false to one's word ”.

SOURCE :

1867 Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 354 : “ Vreliard, adj. des deux genres. Homme qui manque à sa parole. G. L. ”.

G. L. indicates Favre's source of information : Gustave Levrier of Celles (Deux-Sèvres).

Vreliard implies a verb vrelier “ to be false to one's word ”. Vrelier would be satisfactorily explained by such a type as FIR-LIAGAN : cf. O. Fris. liagan, O. Sax. liogan (Dutch liegen), A. Sax. leogan (English lie), O. H. G. liogan, etc. For modern compounds of ver- and the same radical, cf. Dutch verloochenen "nier, renier", Germ. verlügen "dire des mensonges de quelqu'un", etc.

168. — W. French vrelopper "to plane" (Rabelais iii, prol.).

See note 127 on French varlope.

169. — Bresse louhannaise vremouilli "to root about (like a pig)".

See note 148 on French vermiller, vermillonner.

170. — Saintonge, Poitou vreniller.

Cotgrave's Dictionary (1611) contains an article :

"VRENILLER. To pisse, or void urine. ¶ Rab. "

Cotgrave puts under V words beginning with U, V and W. He seems to consider vreniller as ureniller and to connect it with L. urina being no doubt determined thereto by the context in his source :

1552 Rabelais, iv, 10 : "Tant chiasser et vreniller. Dea, je ne dis pas que je n'en tirasse quelque traict..."

where vreniller follows on chiasser. So Rabelais, Œuvres, ed. Jannet, vii (Glossaire, 1874), 217 : "Ureniller, diminutif d'uriner".

But vreniller is one of those words of the West French dialects which Rabelais has so often introduced into his novel and the sixteenth century dialect dictionaries attest it in two forms :

(i) VRENILLER, for Saintonge and Poitou :

1869 Jonain, Dict. du pat. saintonguais, 410 : "Vreniller, v'rneuiller. Aller et venir pour rien, à peu près comme v'stiller. Tous ces verbes font leurs adjectifs : v'rnillou, etc. "

1887 Éveillé, Gloss. saintonguais, 378 : Vreniller, v. n. Se remuer beaucoup sans utilité selon M. Burgaud des Marets "

1867 Favre, Gloss. du Poitou, 354 : "Vreniller, v. n. Tourner d'un côté et d'autre, aller de tous côtés (Voyez vertiller). — Après avoir bien vrenillé de ci et de là (A. Delveau, Françoise, 83) "

(2) FERNILLER, FOURNILLER in other Northern dialects (see note 58 on fernailler for these forms, and also note on Rennes founigoter for the etymology proposed for the word).

171. — Vretacquer (Rabelais, iv, 20).

1552 Rabelais, iv, 20 :

“ Uretacque, hau ! (cria le pilot) Uretacque ! la main à l'insail !
Amene ! Uretacque ! Bressine ! Uretacque ! guare la passe !
Hau amure ! amure bas ! Hau uretacque ! Cap.en houlle !
Desmanche le heaulme ! Accapaye ! ”.

The word uretacque is always spelt with initial u in editions of Rabelais. It is not noted by Cotgrave (1611). The first appearance of the corresponding noun with a definition is in the following :

1694 T. Corneille, Dict., ii, 597 : “ Uretac, s. m. T. de marine. Manœuvre qu'on passe dans une poulie qui est tenue par une herse dans l'éperon, au-dessus de la lieure de beaupré. Cette manœuvre sert à renforcer l'amare de misaine, quand elle a besoin d'estre renforcée ”.

In the xviiiith century dictionaries uretac disappears giving place to the misprint uretau which is found, with an abridgment of Corneille's definition, in the 1719 and 1732 editions of Richelet. The last of the big dictionaries to note uretau is probably the Dictionnaire de Trévoux which in its 1771 edition explains it by means of the full definition given by Corneille except that it changes Corneille's amare (mod. Fr. amarre) “ mooring rope ” to amure “ tack ”, and Corneille's lieure to saisine.

It should be noted that none of these dictionaries distinguish between initial u and initial v in their method of printing. But the distinction is of course made later and in the following explanation of Rabelais' uretacque :

1874 Rabelais, Œuvres, ed. Jannet, vii (Glossaire), 217 : “ Uretacque, ureteau ; manœuvre passée dans une poulie tenue par une herse dans l'éperon au-dessus de la saisine du beaupré, pour renforcer l'amure de misaine ; et commandement pour le faire mouvoir ”, we have a definite choice of u as the initial of uretacque, a further misprint in ureteau for uretau of the xviiiith century dictionaries, a slight modification of the definition of uretau in the Dict. de Trévoux, and an addition due to the editor : commandement pour le faire mouvoir, due to his desire to interpret the imperative character of Rabelais' use of the word.

The word is not noted in the naval dictionaries of the xviiiith century; it is not in Lescallier's Vocabulaire in 1777 and 1797, nor in Romme's Dictionnaire in 1792 and 1813. But it reappears as vretac in Boiste :

1823 Boiste, Dict. Univ., ii, 341 : “ Vretac, s. m. Manœuvre tenue par une herse ” and in two forms in Bonnefoux and Paris :

1848 De Bonnefoux et Paris, Dict. de Marine, ed. 1856, i, 716 : “ Uretac, s. m. (Winding tackle) Sorte de pantoire ou de fausse amure de misaine... ” — 741 : “ Vretac, s. m. (Preventer tack). Cordage qui servait à renforcer l'amure de misaine ”.

Strictly speaking we have only two sources. Rabelais, iv, 20, is our source for the verb vretiquer used in the imperative second person singular like amene, bressine, guare, desmanche, accapaye from amener, bressiner, etc. The vre- of vretiquer shows that Rabelais is using a verb from the W. French ports. For the substantive vretac, which is evidently from the same coast, our earliest source is T. Corneille's Dictionnaire (1694).

The verb vretiquer is to be connected with the Germanic root TAKK- (Dutch tak, Mid. Dutch tacke ; Mid. Engl. takke “ small nail ” ; cf. German Zacke and Fr. attacher). Vretiquer corresponds in form to such a verb as E. Fris. fertaken “ verhaken ” (Doornkaat-Koolman, Wtb. d. ostfries. Spr., i, 469). Its meaning is probably that of the nautical Engl. to tack “ to change the direction of the vessel by shifting the helm to leeward, to veer round ”. The substantive vretac corresponds to the nautical Engl. foretack “ tack of a foresail ” ; the tack of a sail is called in French amure, so that the foretack is l'amure de misaine.
