WORLD SOCIOLOGY: ONE MORE COMMENT ON THE MÜNCH-ALEXANDER DEBATE

In a previous issue of this journal (Vol. 21, N° 3, November 1995), we published elements of a discussion between Richard Münch and Jeffrey Alexander on the “national” character of sociological theory. In the following issue (Vol. 22, N° 1, March 1996), Donald N. Levine and Bryan S. Turner reacted to this debate.

In the present issue, George Ritzer (University of Maryland at College Park), who finds himself in agreement with Münch on several points, expands on his views by proposing a parallel between the expansion of the American fast-food industry and the hegemony of American social theory. This debate will continue in our journal.

Since 1963, SOCIETY has been at the center of debate on the major social and political issues of our day. Operating out of the deep conviction that real-world problems matter, SOCIETY responds to the changing needs and concerns of a sophisticated readership that demands fearless, penetrating analysis of the social attitudes and political beliefs underlying the headlines.

Six times a year, SOCIETY brings you clear thinking and perceptive analysis, presented in readable articles and special features by leading social scientists. It is the publication of choice for those who want to look beyond their personal and professional worlds into a larger arena where key thinkers address fundamental issues that concern us all.
