ZURICH IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

Last week we heard something about the treatment of criminals in ancient Berne. It seems fitting that we should see what life was like in the other big town of Switzerland of that time—in Zürich! Professor W. Oechsli describes this period as under in his recently published "History of Switzerland 1499-1914" (Cambridge University Press, 20s.) which I would commend to every Swiss reader of this paper who is eager to acquaint himself with his country's history:

The principal characteristics of the urban Cantons lay in the contrast between the ruling town and the subject districts, the wall of the town and the moat constituting impassable barriers by which the members of the State were separated into two unequal castes. But in some of the urban Cantons the burghers of the town had as a whole retained their political rights, so that the town, considered by itself, was a representative democracy; whereas in others the burghers had undergone subdivision into patricians and plebeians, the latter being excluded from the government by the former. Consequently the urban Cantons must be classified in two groups, that of the guild aristocracies and that of the patrician aristocracies.

Zürich, in rank the first, and in size and power the second of the Swiss Cantons, was a guild aristocracy. As in the Middle Ages, its constitution reposed upon the society of the Konstaffel and the twelve guilds into which the burghers were divided. The guilds elected their guild-masters, and these constituted half of the Small Council, that is to say, half the executive government. All the other elections were indirect, but the nomination of the guild-masters by the burghers sufficed to prevent the formation of a patriciate and to preserve legal equality within the walls of the town. The industrial and commercial middle class ruled on the Limmat.

For this reason the Zurich constitution exhibited a genuine burgher solidarity, but also a genuinely philistine narrowness. The administration was upright, and Zurich knew nothing of the scale of offices and similar abuses. The public lands were managed with the most scrupulous care; in case of need the authorities did not hesitate to provide for the support of oppressed religious comrades at home or abroad, to furnish assistance for the victims of misfortune, and to create charitable institutions. Although the Carolinum, Zurich's leading educational institution, could not rank with the German universities, this body, in conjunction with the town schools, provided the Canton and the "common bailiwicks" with a well-informed clergy, and at the same time furnished the burghers with a high average education and a receptivity for literary life and activity which could not easily be paralleled elsewhere.

One peculiarity of Zurich was that it went further than the other Swiss towns in the paternal care or police supervision it exhibited on behalf of its subjects. Eating, drinking, smoking, driving and sleighing, the number of guests at parties, wedding and christening presents, the material and cut of clothing, adornment, the dressing of the hair—everything was regulated, forbidden, or restricted. The wages paid to the handicraftsmen and to machine workers, the length and breadth of the tissues, the prices of flour, bread, meat, milk and butter were all decreed by the civic authority. Regular attendance at church was secured by legislative enactments; the dress to be worn by both sexes on these occasions was precisely specified. Sabatianism was pushed to such an extreme that on the Sabbath no one could escape from the town area without special permission. Owing to the puritanical strictness with which, under clerical influences, all unrestrained cheerfulness was repressed even in the rural districts, it was found possible to secure that in the very taverns the peasants should sing psalms.

If this endless interference in all matters awakened in the subjects of Zurich the feeling that "there was more freedom elsewhere," this was to a still greater extent the case with those orders and prohibitions which were the outcome, not of over-zealous paternal benevolence, but of the endeavour to secure a comfortable existence for the ruling townsmen at the expense of the community as a whole. The condition of the rural districts of Zurich was by no means an unhappy one; as Goethe said, the shores of the Lake of Zurich gave "a charming and ideal conception of the finest and highest civilisation." During the eighteenth century there were no direct taxes; the tithes and ground-rents which had from ancient times been levied on landed property were from the legal point of view private taxes, even though they had for the most part become the property of the State and constituted the major part of its income. But the countryman had much greater ground for dissatisfaction in his hateful inferiority to the townsmen in all possible respects. Every office, in the country as well as in the town, which afforded any income, and all the higher positions from the rank of captain upwards in the home military service and also in the "capitulated" regiments, were monopolised by the burghers. The rural handcraftsman was forbidden, under pain of fine and confiscation, to work for the town or to sell his produce there, while the burgher handcraftsman could dispose of his produce indifferently in town and in country. Throughout the Canton cotton and silk were spun and woven, but according to law this industry could be pursued only for the account of a townsmen. The countryman was forbidden to practise the independent business of any kind of manufacture or commerce; he might not participate in either even as a partner. From the liberal professions he was excluded in practice though not by law. The ecclesiastical benefices, appointment to which was for the most part in the hands of the government, were allotted to burghers exclusively; similarly with appointments in the higher schools.

CHANSON DEVANT LA GUERITE.

Par C. F. RAMUZ.

Fille de l'air, rêverie,
Compagnonne du soldat,
Le jour est long sous la pluie;
Tu reviens, le jour s'en va.
Compagnonne, compagne,
Entends tousser les chevaux;
La soupe n'était pas bonne,
Le boutillli n'était pas chaud.
Ceux que j'aime, est-ce qu'ils m'aiment ?
Est-ce qu'ils pensent à moi ?
Ça raminerait quand même,
Ça serait bon par ce froid.
Une surtout, dans sa chambre,
Allant prendre mon portrait,
Et, ayant été le prendre,
Longtemps le regarderai....
Je sors le sien de ma poche,
Te voilà, ma grande amour !...
Mais gare si on approche,
J'en serai pour mes vingt jours.

IL FAISAIT UN CIEL BAS.

Par C. F. RAMUZ.

Il faisait un ciel bas d'automne, un de ces ciels fermés d'octobre, comme souvent dans le pays, quand lourdement descend du haut de la montagne, un épais plafond de brouillard; et on sait qu'au-dessus il y a le soleil, mais dessous il fait triste et sombre; et le poids de vivre est plus grand.

Elle est entrée et elle a dit à son mari:

— Je crois bien que c'est le moment.

Il venait de rentrer, lui aussi; il se tenait dans la cuisine, il s'est tourné vers elle, qui était debout sur le pas de porte, et on ne voyait pas ses traits, seulement le contour de son corps épaisse; il a dit:

Faut-il aller chercher Phémie ?

Ella a dit:

— Oui, va la chercher.

Il a été chercher Phémie; et le soir Phémie est venue.

Le brouillard à présent était descendu. Il pendait entre les maisons comme un drap épais aux plis lourds, et un peu de lumière y démeurait encore, qui lui donnait un semblant de couleur; mais bientôt ce reste de jour aussi s'en alla, et il n'y eut plus que la nuit. Sans étoiles, ni lune; une nuit sans lueur d'aucune sorte, nulle part: une nuit comme un bloc, une nuit comme un mur.

Alors on a fermé la porte. Alors elle s'est mise au lit. Et Phémie est venue s'asseoir à côté d'elle. Alors les heures ont passé. Et puis il a sonné une heure. Alors tu es venue au monde; alors tes yeux se sont ouverts, seules étoiles dans cette ombre; yeux noirs à cause de la nuit, mais petits yeux brillants quand même, d'une clarté qui est en eux, yeux avec un tout petit point de feu, yeux changeants, lampes dans la vie.

Et Phémie l'a frottée, et tu es venue au monde en pleurant, mais nous tous comme toi, parce que les pleurs sont d'abord, et le rire ne vient qu'ensuite. Et ta mère était là, étendue dans le lit, avec une figure blanche: au bout d'un moment elle a demandé:

— Est-ce un garçon ?

Et Phémie a dit:

— Non, c'est une fille.

Peut-être qu'elle a eu chagrin, mais, du moins,

ANTON HUONDER.

Um den Nichtbündnern einen Einblick in die vierte Nationalsprache zu geben, sei hier eine wörtliche Uebersetzung dieses von unsern rätoromanischen Miteidgenossen so hochgehaltenen Liedes hingestellt:

Der freie Bauer.

Das ist mein Fels, das ist mein Stein,
Da setz ich meinen Fuss:
Ererbt habe ich euch von meinem Vater
Habe Niemandem dafür zu danken.

Das ist mein Feld, das ist mein Stall,
Das ist mein Anspruch und Recht:
Bin dafür Niemandem verpflichtet,
Bin hier selbst der König.

Das sind meine Kinder, mein eigen Blut,
Meines lieben Herrgottes Geschenk;
Ich nähre sie mit eigenem Brot,
Sie schlafen unter meinem Dach.

O freie, freie Armut,
Ererbt von meinen Ahnen,
Mit Tapferkeit will ich dich verteidigen,
Wie meinen Augapfel.

Ja, ich bin frei geboren,
Ruhig will ich schlafen,
Und frei bin ich aufgewachsen,
Und frei will ich sterben.

Sprichwörter.

Schwizerat chunnt no der Tat.

D' Welt ist en ebigi Heuet: di eine mached Schöchli, di andere verzettelt si wider.

So goht's uf dere Welt: der eint hätt de Seckeli und der ander's Gelt.

Wenn di Alte Narre si, so si di Junge nid g'schid.

's Gross ist allweg en Ell ful.

En alte Fuchrme het immer Freud, wenn's klepft.

elle l'a caché. Et il y avait un grand trouble en elle, de cette vie née de la sienne, — comme l'arbre porte le fruit, comme la branche se divise et se sépare et devient deux, comme l'étincelle est dans le caillou.

Il y avait la chambre basse au pauvre falot allumé. Il y avait les murs de bois, le bénitier d'étaï au mur, la croix et la branche de buis; il y avait les poutres brunes, les quatre petites fenêtres, que se touchent toutes, et étroites à n'y rien pouvoir passer que la tête (l'été, on met dessus des pots de géranium), — il y avait la chambre basse, et il y avait trois dedans.

Toi, nouvelle venue, et nulle autre que moi. Qui as alors crié, ayant pleuré d'abord. Qui as poussé ce cri, qui est signe de force, et le Christ jaune et bleu, t'a regardée depuis son cadre; et à côté de lui, est la Vierge qui tient l'enfant; et elle a compris, étant mère, et l'Enfant aussi t'a souri.

Pourtant, dès ce moment, ton dur destin était écrit; il a été dit à tes mains: "Vous durcirez et ne serez point blanchies." Dès le commencement, il y a eu sur toi cette loi de travail, qui est celle des pauvres. La chèvre demande à être gardée, et la vache veut être traite, et il faut soigner le mulet. Tout de suite est venue la vie, et elle t'a prise dès le premier jour.

The sketch printed above is taken from the book "Nouvelles et Morceaux," which was published in 1910 by Payot & Cie, Lausanne. It gives a good idea of the author's original style. The little poem is the example of the great Vaudois writer's art given in the wonderful modern anthology "Anthologia Helvetica" which Robert Faesi compiled last year for the Insel Verlag and which contains Swiss poems in all our national languages and dialects, covering a period of a thousand years.

MONSIEUR ARTHUR BAUME.

Nos lecteurs apprendront, comme nous, avec un vif regret, que notre distingué compatriote M. Arthur Baume, Officier de la Légion d'Honneur, s'est vu obligé, pour raisons de santé, de donner sa démission de président du Comité de l'Hôpital Français, et ses collègues ont du s'incliner devant sa décision irrévocable car c'était la seconde fois que M. Baume offrait sa démission.

Le Comité désirant témoigner à M. Baume sa reconnaissance des services exceptionnels qu'il a rendus à l'Hôpital depuis 1894 et particulièrement au cours des huit années de sa présidence, l'a élu, à l'unanimité, Président Honoraire du Comité.

Nous sommes heureux d'apprendre que M. Baume se remet petit à petit de la longue et cruelle maladie qui l'a terrassé en Décembre dernier et nous le félicitons de sa nomination de Président Honoraire du Comité de l'Hôpital Français; institution qui est chère à tous les Suisses qui y trouvent toujours, sans bourse délier, les meilleurs soins et le meilleur accueil.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER BAG.

P. M.—Many thanks for subscription. The “S.O.” should always reach you by Saturday first post. We have made several complaints to the G.P.O. about the service in delivery, and they have promised to speed up the service in future.

Miss A. H.—With reference to your letter the Editor will be delighted to see you at any time in his office. As regards the possible effect of the levy on capital, the outlines of the scheme were given in our last issue, but we shall be pleased to give you a personal introduction to an expert on financial matters who will explain anything you find obscure. We are glad to hear you are becoming a subscriber and are sending you a form to fill up. This form, by the way, you have already received in the propaganda copies previously sent you. The “S.O.” will keep readers informed as to developments of the proposed levy.

Miss L. D.—We are delighted you read the paper with pleasure and interest. Your subscription carries you up to No. 115 inclusive.

H. B.—We much regret to hear that the arrears in your subscription were caused by illness, and we trust you are well on the way to complete recovery. The copies you request on Dr. Spahlinger's treatment have been forwarded to you.

H. M.—Your congratulations are warmly appreciated on the change in the paper which you call “removing its infant skirt and dressing it in long trousers” (!), and on the addition of a literary page. This progress has been welcomed by many readers.

Miss H. and others.—The film “Running Waters,” referred to in last week's “Notes and Gleanings,” has not yet been released, and we are told that this film will probably be “showed” to the public at the end of April.

SWISS BANK FOOTBALL CLUB.

SWISS BANK 1st XI v. SOUTH BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANY 1st XI at Preston Road.

A fairly evenly contested game for the first twenty minutes. Aided by a very strong wind, the visitors made several early raids on the home goal, but were met by a sound defence. At half-time the Bank led by 2 to 0. The Bank pressed continuously all through the second half and scored eight goals before easing up. All the Bank forwards were on the target: Tobin (4); Gourbache (3); Bohannan, Tobler and Benz all scoring. The home defence proved much too strong for the opposing attack.

Final result: Swiss Bank 10, South British Insurance Company 0.

Team: Zurcher; Herzog; Ash; Schwendener, Rufer. Bornand; Tobler, Bohannan, Gourbache, Tobin, Benz. SWISS BANK 2nd XI v. LLOYD'S BANK 4th XI at Preston Road.

The Swiss Bank 2nd XI had in their first home League match this season to meet Lloyd's Bank 4th XI. The visitors, losing the toss, had to play against a fairly strong wind, and made their game in consequence a defensive one. Steiner, who led the Red's attack, swung the ball about well, and the wings, Rueff and Hildebrand, were clever raiders. After settling down, Smith opened the score for the home team, being the result of a fast run along the touchline by Rueff, who centred in fine style across the goalmouth. In the second half our defence was tested on several occasions, but proved very sturdy. Zur Linden and Peter booting the ball up the field with smart kicks, spoiling every chance of equalising the score. The Swiss, attacking again in turn, succeeded to improve their lead, which point had to be credited to Hickson. It was in the last minute that the Reds' leader broke through—on his own, beating the backs and goalie, and tapping the ball into the net.

Result: Swiss Bank 3, Lloyd's Bank 0.

Team: Grob; Zur Linden; Peter; Bonjour, Schranz, Kebbell; Rueff, Hickson, Steiner, Smith, Hildebrand. SWISS BANK 3rd XI v. OBERON ATHLETIC F.C.

The Bank's team was handicapped by being a man short, and therefore had to work very hard to stop the opponents' attacks. The game was very keen, but the Oberon were superior in every way, and at half-time led by 2 to 0. In the second half the Swiss had to play a defensive game, and were actually beaten by 4 to 0.

Team: Lardet; Scherz, Wangler; Gerber, Gautsch. Stutz; Gunther, Weber, Guy, Schaub.
