CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor "The Swiss Observer."

Sir,—“The Swiss Observer” might like to hear of an incident that occurred at Seaford on Easter Monday last.

A Swiss from London was spending a few days with his wife at that little town so delightful on account of its position in the middle of the glorious Downs. They had just returned from a day's walk to Alfriston, etc., and were resting on the beach, when they saw that a child had fallen into the sea. The man realized there was no time to lose, as the tide was receding and a strong wind blowing from shore. He ran across the beach and fully dressed entered the water and soon reached the little girl. But the wife had seen him go out of his depth, and not knowing he could swim, herself entered the water, making pluckily for the two struggling “bathers.” Fortunately these were by then turning round towards the shore, and in a short time the three of them were safe, though rather wet. The whole episode took only a few minutes, but this apparently proved enough for the man's gold watch—also Swiss born—to get real sick and show 5.30 o'clock ever since.
