One of the first to join the movement was Mr. Dimier, who found in it an outlet for his innate love of his fellow-men. At first we met on a Friday night, but we found this too strenuous and changed the day to Monday, when we were fresher for the long evening's work. When our former president, Mr. Henri Vernet, died in 1909, Mr. Georges Dimier was unanimously elected in his place—and an ideal president he made. Not only did he contribute most generously to the funds of the Society, he also gave himself, his time, his work and, above all, his contagious enthusiasm in an unlimited measure. He had a special 'gift' for collecting funds, and nobody could resist his unselfish appeals. His heart was so much with the poor that on many a joyous occasion in our Colony he would spontaneously suggest everyone present should spare a trifle for our less fortunate compatriots. Thanks to these collections and his other
