dismissed the complaint against the head keeper, who followed by the two shuffling bruis, walked out of the court-room.

and no doubt, the head keeper regaled his brown friends with a choice carrot or two. They had earned some!

Preservation of Swiss Beauty Spot.

The Times, July 14th:—

A successful attempt has been made by a group of Swiss alpinists and nature lovers to preserve the natural beauty of the Fafler-Alp (5,846ft.), the last glen in the Loetschental, in Canton Valais, and to prevent its attractions from being spoiled by the ever-growing hotel industry.

When, in 1914, a scheme was set up for building three big hotels in that remote glen, the group of Swiss alpinists, wishing to keep the Fafler-Alp as a sort of natural reserve, resolved to buy the place. By agreement with the Cantonal Government and Commune, they purchased the existing hotel and the adjacent ground, as well as all rights over water and springs, thus putting an end to any attempt to build huge hotels in the valley. They themselves either contributed or raised the necessary capital for purchasing the place and running the small mountain hotel, which was renewed but will not be enlarged. The first years were difficult, but now things are going on smoothly, and the profits are sufficient to pay the interest on the capital invested. If any surplus profits are made, they will be used for the improvement of the place, as those who undertook the purchase do not intend to make any profit for themselves. If nothing interferes with this interesting experiment the Fafler-Alp will remain a lonely mountain glen, and will not be invaded by ugly modern buildings and shops.

It is just as well to preserve some of our Swiss beauty spots, because one never knows how long they are going to last, seeing that even mountain tops move, glaciers dwindle, and, in short, the whole country will become as flat as an ironing board by and by. (But not in your life-time, my friend, so don't hasten your holiday!) Read what The Times said on July 13th.

Glacier Movements in the Alps.

The retreating movement of the Swiss Alpine glaciers, which began in 1922, continued throughout the year 1925. This is made clear by the observations made by Professor P. L. Mercanton, of Lausanne, an expert in glaciology. Snowfalls were abundant during the preceding winter, but they were completely "eaten" by the sun during the subsequent summer.

One example may help to show the size of this movement. The mass of new snow reached a depth of 7ft. on the Orny glacier at the beginning of the summer season; the quantity of snow that melted during the summer months reached a depth of 18ft., so that the surface of the glacier sank by 11ft.

Out of 100 Swiss glaciers observed in 1925, 19 were advancing (23 in 1924), 11 were at a standstill (11 in 1924), and 69 were retreating (66 in 1924). The Saleinaz glacier advanced by 63ft. and the lower Grindelwald glacier by 29ft.; on the other hand, the Aletsch glacier retreated by 30ft., the Allalin glacier by 30ft., the Eiger glacier by 61ft., and the upper Grindelwald glacier by 50ft.

The consequence of this retreating movement is that the glaciers are now in a broken condition, cut by deep crevasses which make them difficult and sometimes dangerous to cross. There is every reason to believe that this is the beginning of a period of general retreat; if this be the case, it will be evidence in favour of the theory that the periodicity of the glacier movements is 35 years. During nearly 35 years ending 1922 there was a general advance of Alpine glaciers. It remains to be seen whether in another 35 years we shall be entering on another period of advance.

In The Observer of July 11th, I came across the following "tall" story:

The papers of the week have not had any piece of news quite so exciting as one which I find in The Observer of a hundred years ago. It is given as from "a Paris paper," and on the authority of "Dr. James Hotham, of Morpeth, in Northumberland." Dr. Hotham had just come from Switzerland, where he had visited Mt. St. Gothard, and made a startling discovery:—

A league from Alzoli, in the valley of Levantina, at the bottom of a kind of cavern, the body of a man, about thirty years of age, was perceived, under a heap of ice, proceeding from an avalanche. The body seemed to be fresh, as if it had been stifled only half an hour before.

The body, covered with a crust of ice, was taken out and placed in warm water, from which it was transferred to bed and treated in the manner customary with cases of suffocation, "by which means animation was restored":—

What was the astonishment of everybody when the individual, having recovered the use of his faculties, declared that he was Roger Dodsworth, son of the antiquary of the same name, born in 1629, who, returning from Italy in 1660, a year after the death of his father, was buried under an avalanche?

The account goes on to say that "Mr. Dodsworth feels a great stiffness in all his joints," but that "by degrees they will become as flexible as before the accident."

Unfortunately the story (which has a striking similarity to the motive of Mr. Wells's "When the Sleeper Wakes") is left without an ending. "If," concludes the Paris narrative, "Mr. Dodsworth fully recovers, and should pass through Lyons to return to his country after 166 years' absence, it may be predicted that he will attract in the highest degree the public curiosity." But whether he did recover, and whether he returned as a Rip van Winkle to England, we do not learn; either then or (so far as I can ascertain) subsequently. We can only presume that if England had a Rip van Winkle in 1826 she would not have buried the secret in so much obscurity.

And, inserting it in these columns, I just wonder how many of my readers will have to read it twice ere seeing that it was originally printed over a century ago?

Italy and Ticino.

Daily Mail, July 12th:—

In reply to the protests in the Swiss Press against the alleged Fascist campaign for the return to Italy of the Swiss canton of Ticino and against the Italian complaints of the Germanisation of the canton, a semi-official statement has been issued at Rome. This communiqué says that in view of the repeated expressions of friendship on the part of the Italian Government the attitude of distrust of certain members of the Swiss Government is entirely unjustified.

Italy, however, maintains her right to keep a vigilant eye on all that passes at her frontiers.

"It is only natural," says the communiqué, "that we should want to know since when have numerous Germans who have bought property on the hills dominating Lake Maggiore acquired Swiss citizenship."

The argument in the last sentence of the above is very curious and a somewhat specious one, but the main thing is that our Ticinesi are Swiss at heart and none than they are more loyal to mother Helvetia, as all those who know and love our beautiful Canton south of the Gotthard know full well. I fancy the Italians would have a tough job, if they tried to assimilate the Ticino. Relationship of culture and language is one thing, political relationship is another.

"RIMEMBRANZE."

SERATE DI LUGLIO.

Lunghe serate placide d'estate, non sarete mai più che ricordi cari, sogni deliziosi; memorie di rose sfogliate. . . .

Serate senza luna, ombre d'alberi, di cespugli fioriti, appena delineati nell'oscurità della notte . . . calma perfetta di natura fresca ed odorosa dopo uno giorno d'un sole bruciante . . . serata oscura, parco fitto di frondami da sembrar fantasmi, fontana famigliare dal zampillo d'acqua fresca e purissima, panchina di sasso ove ci attardavamo di sera, sedute, colla testa riposante contro il mure di casa, in dolce rapimento, contemplando estatiche, un firmamento di un color turchino meraviglioso, costellato di una miriade di "vivide facelle," stelle filanti, via lattea che attraversavano vaporosa ed inscrutabile, quell'immensità di una superba bellezza . . . oh no, non ritornerei giammai!

La vita, tutta un'esistenza mi si apriva . . . e contemplavo "allora" in voi . . . tutto un avvenire io studiavo, scrutinavo in voi, in quelle serate sublimi, senza luna, calme, placide e belle, sedute sulla panchina di sasso, colla testa reclinata, poggiato al mure di "casa" . . .

Si beveva a pieni polmoni quell'aria imbalzata, dall'odor delle rose mescolato a quello del gelsomino, del caprifoglio e delle magnolie. . . .

L'occhio vagava e rincorreva le luci che ingemmavano il giardino, chiamate dal caldo e dalla fragranza dei fiori; apparenti, sparenti; incerte e come stupite d'esistere; lucciole verde oro, un pò stella, un pò fuoco fatuo da sembrar lumicini delle streghe. . . .

Ero giovane allora; ero sicura d'esserlo sempre e bevevo a gran sorsi quella soavità di solitudine piena di un'intima melodia; quelle vibrazioni molteplici di natura notturna che rendono sonoro ciascun atomo del silenzio. . . .

Tanti mai anni son passati dopo quel tempo, e cerco, in una dolce serata estiva di soverchiare l'altra lontane . . .

Ricordandole, ho nel cervello immagini di luce, infinito moltiplicarsi di stelle nel cielo di luglio, e ciascuna ha un suo modo di guardare, di palpitar, di splendere, . . .
