durant plusieurs mois, même, grâce aux abon dantes chutes de neige, tout trafic est interrompu. Il va sans dire qu'une ville isolée ne peut se développer normalement. Il y a quelques années, la population de la Chaux-de-Fonds dépas sait les 40,000 habitants. Aujourd'hui, elle n'est plus que de 38,000 environ. Sensible diminution, qui s'explique, en partie, par la gravité des crises qui frappèrent l'industrie horlogère, mais aussi par cet isolement des Montagnes neuchateloises. D'ailleurs, la ville du Locle est dans une situation semblable à celle de sa voisine.

Depuis quelque temps, les autorités s'inquiètent de cette stagnation. L'on a cherché une issue. C'est alors qu'une idée a germé: si l'on perçait un tunnel routier sous la Vue-des-Alpes? Un projet, soigneusement établi par l'ingénieur. communal de la Chaux-de-Fonds, M. Curti, a été soumis au Conseil d'Etat. Ce projet prévoit un tunnel rectiligne de 6 kilomètres (le plus long du monde !) qui partirait des Crozettes, pres de la Chaux-de-Fonds, pour aboutir à la Jonchère dans le Val-de-Ruz. Réservé aux voitures automobiles, le tunnel pourrait contenir également la voie ferrée Neuchâtel la Chaux-de-Fonds. Certes, la réalisation de ce projet grandiose présenterait de nombreuses difficultés. Certains problèmes techniques (entre autres, l'éclairage et l'aération) seraient délicats à resoudre.
UN EX-DIREGTEUR INCULPE D'ESCROQUERIES.
Siegfried Kramer, l'ex-directeur d'une maison genevoise de transports internationaux, arrêté lundi sous l'inculpation d'escroqueries et d'abus de confiance, avait occupé ces fonctions depuis 1916. Grâce à un compte qu'il s'était ouvert dans la maison à l'insu du conseil d'administration, il avait détourné une somme de $8,000 \mathrm{frs}$. D'autre part, il arait effectué à plusieurs reprises des prélèvements importants pour son usage personnel, sans en donner justification, et il avait dérobé aussi 2000 francs dans la caisse d'une agence de la même maison. Enfin, il s'était approprié un montant de 5000 francs au prejudice de la Fédération suisse des vagons réservoirs, dont il était caissier. Le total des fonds que Kramer a ainsi détournés s'élève à $26,000 \mathrm{frs}$.

Au cours de l'interrogatoire, l'inculpé-qui gagnait annuellement 20,000 francs comme direc-teur-a déclaré qu'il avait employé le produit de ses détournements à ses menus plaisirs et à des spéculations.

Tractors in Demand

I cull the following from the Newcastle Daily Journal and North Star (7th May)

It is expected that many different trades will be represented at the tractor trials which are shortly to be held near Oxford for the first time since the War. The tractor is nowadays being largely used outside agriculture. One of its great successes has been in pulling shooting brakes on grouse moors at large shoots, and recently the tractor has been used in Switzerland to convey tourists up slopes which zerland to convey tourists up slopes which hitherto have been visited only on foot. In. deed, the sales for agriculture have been the least satisfactory of all, principally owing to the high cost of repairs and the absence of standard charges. It is hoped to announce at the trials a new repair service for farmers at a reasonable cost.
Tractors pulling tourists up slopes almost conjures up a Heath Robinson picture!
The Great Organ of Fribourg.
From the Leicester Mail (8th May)
Aloysius Mooser's great organ in the Cathedral of St. Nicholas at Fribourg, Switzerland, after a lengthy winter process of cleaning and adjustment, is again ready for its sum mer" "storm" concerts.

For nearly a century now the weekly re citals upon the organ of Jacques Vogt's "Pas toral Scene with Storm" has been a "draw" for thousands of tourists during the Swiss summer season. The recital has become a tradition and the piece, or parts of it, is included in almost every organ programme of the Cathedral.

Aloysins Mooser constructed his huge organ during the ten years 182t-34. At that time it contained 63 pipes, but in 1911 important improvements were made, giving the organ 90 pipes, four claviers, three swell boxes, with the astounding total of 810 stops, pedals, draw knobs and levers. There are larger organs in the world than at Fribourg. But Aloysius Mooser's work is unique in its purity of tone, aided so dramatically by the marvellous acoustics of the Cathedral.

The "Pastoral Scene with Storm" is a sound picture of the following outline: A fair sky and serenity over the Alps. The shep herds notes. From the valley the bells of the monastery chime. Some peasant girls sing. Then-clouds begin to roll up, the wind rises, howls. Thunder followed by a deafening detonation as the lightning strikes a huge boulder. A chaos of furious organ music. The der. A chaos of furious organ music. The tempest calms. From the valley comes the convent chimes and the singing of the nuns. The sun blazes forth again as the peasants take up their abandoned work.
"The Storm" at Fribourg is an item which should, if possible, be included in the itinerary of every visitor to Switzerland. For in the space or half an hour it will convey to the try which could only be otherwise realised by a lengthy stay.

I do not remember ever having heard Jacques Vogt's "Pastoral Scene with Storm," and I wonder whether the good people of Fribourg will arrange for it to be broadcast next aptumn, when the International Wireless Show will take place from the Wireless World (6th May). paragraph from the Wireless World (6th May)

Fribourg, Switzerland, will be the seat of an International Wireless Show from September 7th to 15 th next. The Swiss broadcasting authorities will take an active part in organising the exhibition, which will be representative of all the leading European countries.
If, by that time, Switzerland boasts at long last of a powerful broadcasting station, we may hope to pick up a relay from that exhibition and, perhaps, that wonderful piece of organ music

The selection from the writings of Gott fried Keller contained in "'The People of Seld wyla and Seven Legends ", (translated by M. D. Hottinger, Dent, $7 / 6$ ) should make known to a wider English audience a short-story writer of real genius. Keller, as his excellent translator admits in a brief introductory sketch of his life and achievement, was not a genius for whom no frontiers existed. The intensity, indeed, of his local attachment was one of his greatest qualities. But there is more than Switzerland in Keller, there is humanity; he has, preserving all the peculiarities of the local given it general significance. He himself wrote to a friend: "I am firmly convinced that no artist can look to a future who is not willing to be entirely and exclusively a mortal man." And one of the greatest of his stories, "A Village Romeo and Juliet," begins with the words: "This story would be but an idle imitation if it were not founded upon an actual incident. But it proves how deep in human life lie the roots of those fables on which the great works of the past are built up.'

Herein lies the secret of Keller's capacity for blending the actual with the legendary, the folk-tale and the fable, and also the absence of all self-consciousness from his art. He was in fact the born storyteller, although it took him years of wretchedness and misguided exhim year's of wretchedness and misguided excover his inevitable bent. His stories leave an impression of telling themselves. The sense of impression of telling themselves. The sense of manipulation and psychological effort, so characteristic of the modern short story, never intrudes. Their philosophy and their moral are expressed implicitly in the action or in situations intrinsically humorous. For Keller's humour is the unforced flower of his wisdom and his humanity. His stories are parables, and like all true parables they are rooted in the common soil of life.

Traditional Costumes of the Swiss Peasant.

From the Manchester Guardian (15th May)
In Switzerland, despite the fact that no country in Europe is more exploited for the benefit of the tourist, the old peasant costumes linger doggedly on. In this tenacions clinging to a picturesque dress backed by centuries of tradition there is no studied effect to lure the tourist. In the remoter valleys the Swiss peasant, notably on Sunday, wears his dress utterly ant, notably on Sunday, wears his dress utterly naturally. It is this which gives such unalloyed charm to the sight of a group of young men and girls in the black velvet and vivid "edelweiss" embroidery which forms the basis f most of Switzerland's cantonal costumes.
The dress varies considerably in the different cantons, and almost every change has either history or the demands of local working conditions to account for it. In Hallau the dress of the men is a survival of an old Spanish attire of the 16th century, when Spanish immigrants settled in the region. It consists of pleated breeches of black cloth, full sleeves, tapering from shoulder to wrist, and a fluted very slight modification of Velazquez's famous picture of Philip II. of Spain. In the Illiez Valley, where the women, as well as the men, mount with the cattle to the higher pastures in the summer, the women adopt male dress. Troukerchief over the head, is the usual mode to day.

No greater diversity of costume is to be found than in the Canton of Valais. Here the women's headdress reaches elaborate effects. It is a Valaisan proverb that "a woman's centre of the Rhône Valley area of Valais the headdress is a hat of white straw whose lofty crown is swathed again and again with bands of velvet and silk, gold and silver. Often these ribands reach a length of 30 and 40 metres.

In the Loetschental, that strange hidden valley on the Laetschberg route where customs centuries old still linger on, the dress of the women is almost sheer Tudor-long, full skirts and a close-fitting black bonnet. Apart from the interest of its peasant dresses the Loetschental is notable for the elaborate old carvrow on the chalets of the vilages. It is a narrow, eerie valley, winding beneath the eaves of the mountains into the heart of the Alps. For atl its remoteness from the outer world, it lies but a mile from the little station of Goppenstein, at the southern end of the Loetschberg Tunnel. Tunnel.

Well, Whitsun is past and we are back at work again, feeling surely very much better for the glorious holiday we have had and the splendid sunshine we have enjoyed. The weather reminded sunshine we have enjoyed. The weather reminded

Fine Golf Feat by a Swiss. 380 YARDS HOLE IN ONE.

Mr. C. Studer, playing over the Pollards Hill golf Course, holed out with his drive at the eleventh hole, which measures 308 yards. There was a following breeze, and the ball ran well.

Holes in one are usually accomplished at distances between 100 and 200 yards. The official records of golf contain only few instances of the feat being achieved at distances over 300 yards.

The longest hole in one was at the ninth hole at Stoneham, Southampton, which measures 340 yards, by George Kirby, in September last year. There are two instances at 330 yards, one (in America) at 328 yards, and another at 325 yards. Mr. Studer's feat ranks next in the records.

OUR PRIZE STORY

The offer of a prize of One Guinea for the best continuation and conclusion of the first half of a short story by "Audax," entitled "The Ticket" and published in the Swiss Observer of May 18th, has brought in four attempts, one of which is in verse. The best one, in the Editor's opinion, fo the style of writing as well as for the ingenuit of the dénouement, is printed below and will be given the prize. The winner is G. C. Beedle, 148 York Road, London, S.E.1. Other attempts will be published next week.

Should any other reader feel like enlivening the contents of the S.O. by offering a prize for contributions we would be very grateful.-Ed.).

The Ticket. (Conclusion.)

The weeks went by, and with every new day breathing the scents and spreading the joy of Spring, the fears and bitterness in Mrs. Pedrinis heart began gradually to disappear. The tiny seed of hope that had into full-flowered expectation, and she was already busily into full-flowered expectation, and she was already busily building castles in the air. How exciting life would be building castles in the air. How exciting life would if she won that fabulous sum in the famous lotter-if She banished the thought of the million to one chance against such a stroke of luck coming her way. After all, somebody had to win!

Mrs. Pedrini's hopes gained even greater strength, and sometimes in her infrequent day-dreams she reached a state little short of sublime ecstasy. Soon all would be changed. Already the dull, prosaic round of her be changed. Already the dull, prosaic round of her humdrum existence had assumed an intangibly romantic quality; was it not but the prelude to a gorgeous playa play in which the vivid-coloured scenes would be aid in all the pleasantest spots in Europe-the Riviera, St Moritz, Naples, Venice! £200,000! What a trmitles and dazzling vista of delights spread itself before her brightened eyes! The shabby old piano at the High School was no longer the bête noir of her lite; it had now assumed the mellow tone of a Blüthner grand, an the walls of the drab room in which she had spent so many interminable hours of drudgery were adorned with priceles

Arriving home in the evenings she visualised transformed Signor Pedrini, whose delicate white fingers cello. The lovingly touching the strings of her imagin ngs the frail little Tessa, too, underwent a strikin metamorphosis. There she was, clad in the daintiest of rocks, pirouetting gaily and clapping her hands as th old man smilingly indulged her with a Chopin fantaisie. The sun would shine with an added brightness, the feathered songsters carol with an even sweeter note-if!
"Luigi," she asked one evening, as the old man was toying disdainfully with his frugal meal, "Luigi, do you think I might win that huge prize in the Calcutta? Wouldn't it be heavenly!'

You will not win-no, no!
Mrs. Pedrini bit her lip at the gruff words and the suspicion of a tear welled up in her eyes as her rosy visions began to melt away, giving place to cold calities.
"Mummy," piped up a little voice, "I 'specs you will. "And then Itl have a nice big dolly!"

Tessa relapsed into the old man, sternly
Disharmony continued to brood over and the Spiri of Disharmony continued to brood over the little house in the orchard. It was the rightful abode of the God dess of Harmony. But the muses flee from discord.

"Rat-tat!"

Mrs. Pedrini flew to the door of the little cottage and opened it with a fast beating heart. At the sigh f her friend's face it almost failed her completely.
"Afraid you were unlucky," began the visitor, with a rueful smile.

Mrs. Brown mean-
Mrs. Brown opened the paper she was carrying and put her finger on a heavily-scored paragraph.
with a disparaging emphasis on the second word, "and of course he gets the $f 200,000$ - to add to his millions I suppose! Lucky, wasn't he? Of course, the chance were a million to one against our getting even a horse but I must admit I did hope for a moment...

Mrs. Brown rattled on for some minutes, little real ising the dull despair that had descended upon he friend. No hopes! A million to one chance! Mrs Pedrini echoed the words over and over again in her mind and leaned against the doorpost for support. What a simple, credulous creature she had been to build he dream castles on such a poor foundation. She laughed half-hysterically, to herself. Who was she, anyway, to be chosen as the favoured of the gods-the gods of chance! But she had so longed for things to be changed. Her "unsubstantial pageant" faded far, far into the dis tance; and her sparkling eyes were dimmed.
"Thanks so much for telling me." Mrs. Pedrin forced a smile, mechanically exchanged a few comment on the weather, and Mrs. Brown returned through the leafy avenue of trees to the dusty highroad.

The disillusioned woman walked wearily into th little dining room, dropped into a worn armchair, and hid her head in her hands.
"Don't c'y, mummy!" whispered a little voice, and warm, comforting arm stole around her neck.

Mrs. Pedrini raised her head, and gently kissed the child, who was scanning her drawn face with large, anxious eyes.
