SWISS TRADE INDUSTRY.

A report on "Economic Conditions in Swit-zerland" by Major H. F. Heywood, Commercial Secretary to H.M. Legation, Berne, is published for the Department of Overseas Trade by the Stationery Office, price 1s. 7d. post free.

Stationery Office, price 1s. 7d. post free. The Commercial Secretary states that Swit-zerland is highly industrialised, 46 per cent. of her working population being employed in indus-try as against 25 per cent. in agriculture. The goods produced being almost exclusively of high quality and finish, Great Britain is found to have been her best customer in 1931. On the other hand, Great Britain has not enjoyed an adequate share of the trade in metals and semi-manufac-tured materials which are required to be imported by Swiss industry, though it is hoped that the exchange fall in the value of the pound may im-prove the position. The standard of living is high and the purchasing capacity remarkably large for the size of the country.

For a long period Swiss economic conditions remained unaffected by world conditions, but the effect was marked from the middle of 1931, the number of unemployed being approximately doubled between August and November. A flood of cheap German goods and other factors resulted in the introduction of a system of restricted in ports, and it is evident that the country will not buy goods for which she cannot afford to pay. Payments in the past have been made punctually and in a sound currency.

Considerable attention is devoted in the re-Considerable attention is devoted in the re-port to the position of each of the main Swiss in-dustries, and a careful account is given of the various legislative measures connected with trade which were introduced. The usual chapters re-lating to financial conditions and transport, natural resources and social questions, complete the survey of economic conditions ruling in the country. country.

A terrible crime has been revealed by the dis-covery of the mutilated body of an American girl, Miss Irene Eibershoff, in a lonely spot between the villages of St. Nicholas and St. Alden. The body of the girl, who was 18 years old, was found by peasants. The face had been smashed in with a rock. Police believe that she was fighting for her honour before she was mur-dered. The body had been hastily covered with strong. stones

She had been travelling with her sister, Helen, but had left Zermatt alone on Thursday night. Her sister followed her on foot. Police removed the body to the mortuary at act in common. The acceptance of the Court's decision implies that France is prepared to withdraw the Customs barrier (which had been advanced to Geneva) back to the line laid down in the treaties of 1815 to 1816, the terms of the judgment having stipulated that this must be done before January 1, 1934. The decision to accept the ruling virtually brings to an end the long litigation that arose from Article 435 of the Treaty of Versailles, which stated that the stipulations of the 1815 treaty were no longer consistent with present conditions, and that it was for France and Switzerland to arrive at a suitable settlement of the status of these territories. territories.

territories. Although French fiscal sovereignty is not otherwise affected by the obligation to remove the Customs frontier back to the former limits, the settlement is regarded as being very detrimental to French interests. One strong objection is that the Customs frontier will now cut across the main railway line from Evian to Paris and Evian to Bellegarde in four places, and unless some satis-factory arrangement with Switzerland is reached great inconvenience is likely to be caused to tourist traffic. At the meeting of the Council-General of Haute Savoie yesterday the President, M. Fernand David, who also represents the De-partment in the Senate, declared that the negotia-tions Switzerland were not likely to be easy, and urged the French Government to take steps to maintain the solidarity of interests between the inhabitants of the free zones and the rest of France.
