surpassed all others, which is saying a lot. Thence the lecturer went on to Pietermaritzburg, a very progressive city where the municipality are sparing no efforts to encourage manufacturing enterprise. It was there that he met a compatriot from Vevey, Monsieur J. de Schoulepkow, the General Manager of the chocolate factory recently established by Nestle's (South African) Ltd. The site occupied comprises 6½ acres and nearly £70,000 were spent in erecting buildings and installing plant and machinery. The lecturer was taken over this most up-to-date factory and was astonished to see the complicated process of chocolate manufacturing.

The factory was the outcome of tariffs in a country where even first-class Swiss chocolate could no longer hold its own against the second-rate, but considerably cheaper, home-product.

The heat at a time of the year when Europe is ice and snow-bound, caused hardships to Europeans and natives alike. When the lecturer gave first-aid to a native who had broken down in the sweltering heat, the one most surprised was the sufferer himself who showed even greater astonishment than the passers-by.

Thence the lecturer proceeded to Johannesburg, the largest city in Africa south of Cairo, where sky-scrappers are growing up like mushrooms.

Johannesburg is the very pulse and commercial centre of South Africa. The lecturer then vividly related a descent into one of the Rand's deepest gold mines "The Village Deep." The reefs from which over £600,000,000 worth of gold have been extricated run east and west of the town for a distance of nearly 130 miles.

Referring to Pretoria, the administrative capital of the Union of South Africa, Mr. Chapuis mentioned that the name of one of our compatriots resident in London is inscribed on the "Roll of Honour" in the main entrance. He was referring to Mr. Th. Schaefer, who was one of the architects responsible for this magnificent building.

Whilst in Pretoria the lecturer had occasion to meet a Swiss missionary, Monsieur Junod, in charge of the "Mission Suisse." The lecturer was greatly impressed by the valiant work carried on by this missionary which changed his somewhat sceptical views on missionary work. He was taken over the Leper Concentration Camp and Hospitals, some seven miles out of Pretoria, and was enthused by the unselfish work which our compatriot is carrying on among these poor beings, afflicted with the most dreaded disease.

The lecturer altogether travelled for three months in South Africa, visiting sixteen towns and covering nearly 3,000 miles by rail. He saw much evidence of the periodical droughts which are a great set-back to an otherwise glorious country and he knew of one farmer who lost 3,000 sheep within a month. In some localities there had been no rain for thirty-one months. He also eulogized the comfortable railway travelling in South Africa. Although there are no special sleeping cars the converted regular coaches offer every comfort.

On the return journey to England the lecturer visited St. Helena and recounted his impressions of Napoleon's famous last residence.

Despite his many wonderful experiences, which undoubtedly many amongst the audience would have liked to share with him, the lecturer was filled with joy when Albion's shores were sighted after a somewhat monotonous home-journey. "Home, sweet Home."

This concluded a most interesting address which was greatly appreciated by the audience who expressed their thanks in no half-hearted manner.

THE ACADEMY CINEMA.

After comedy — tragedy. I hope that many of you took my advice to see Paris-Méditerranée and I now recommend you to see the next film which starts at the Academy Cinema, 165, Oxford Street on Saturday, October 21st.

This film will be the original version in German of "M."

Some of you may remember seeing an adaptation of it in English last year, but I think it is much better in German.

As will be remembered, the story deals with a state of terror produced in a town in Germany by a series of child murders.

The police are at their wits end and raid after raid is made without success, until the underworld is harried to such an extent that it can no longer continue its pursuits in normal safety.

It decides to act for itself and mobilises the beggars of the town to act as spies.

Finally the murderer is caught and is tried before a meeting of the underworld.

The film is interesting because it has not only a well connected story, but deals with a very interesting psycho-legal problem, as to whether it is better (theory of the law) to intern a homicidal maniac in an asylum, from which he may possibly escape and repeat his crimes, or whether he should be suppressed (theory of the underworld). There are some excellent scenes of contrast, for instance, a conference at police headquarters and one at the underworld's headquarters, showing the difficulties of catching the criminal and how finally the underworld decides that there is only one solution, namely to mobilise its own forces and to solve the problem itself.

May I say that nobody need be afraid to see this film, as the subject has been treated with great tact and the murders are not shown on the screen.

The acting is superb. Peter Lorre as the murderer is especially good and the distinction between his sanity under ordinary conditions and his insanity when the attacks of madness occur is well brought out. Gerhard Bienert as the Criminal Chief and Fritz Gnass as the Burglar are also extremely good.

Superimposed sub-titles in English enable those whose German is a little rusty to follow the dialogue.
