Economics

The Swiss Federal Government has approved a new trade agreement with Russia. The treaty, which has been signed for one year but which is renewable by tacit consent, has come into force on April 1st.

While Russia undertakes to deliver during the first year 100,000 tons of wheat, certain quantities of barley, oats, and wood, raw materials for the chemical industry, and 15,000 tons of petrol, to a total of 120m. Swiss francs, Switzerland will supply mainly machines, machine-tools, dyes, artificial silk, shoes, 1,000 head of cattle, and some cheese, aggregating some 75m. francs.

The Swiss franc has been introduced on the Paris free foreign exchange market under the same regulations governing trade in dollars and escudos.

Exporters may sell 50 per cent. of their sales proceeds on the free market and the remainder to the Exchange Stabilisation Fund at the official rate. All imports from Switzerland will also be settled half at the free, half at the official rate.

Humanitarian

A man recently back from Switzerland wrote to a photographer there for copies of a picture, regretting that currency restrictions debarred him from sending money for them.

The pictures came by return of post with a note: "Pay me in heaven or in hell."

"Have I infringed the currency regulations," asks the correspondent, "by creating a credit in an area (presumably) outside the sterling area?"

No! There are places where even the Treasury's long arm does not reach. Joking apart, it would be an offence to incur a debt like this in Switzerland, but a legal view is that the photographer's reply lets the correspondent out by implying the pictures are a gift and no payment is expected.

The war cost Switzerland 2,500,000,000.— francs (about £144,175,322) in damage to property, requisitioning, and losses abroad.

The Papal Swiss Guard celebrated the fourth centenary of its foundation last week with Mass in the Church of St. Martin and St. Sebastian, Vatican City.

War restrictions have been further relaxed in Switzerland, coal has been taken off the ration and bread cards have been abolished. The only rationed food-stuffs are flour, semolina, certain fats and rice.
