Italy (according to the City Observer) will build two trans-Atlantic liners with Swiss financial backing, primarily to carry U.S. tourists to and from Switzerland through the Port of Genoa. An agreement on these lines has been reached by the Italia Shipping Company and the Swiss Departments of Finance and the Department of Posts and Communications.

The agreement was reached recently in Berne. It will provide for a Swiss credit of 55,000,000 Swiss francs (about £3,235,000) to the Italian company for the building of two 25,000-ton liners.

The liners would be "non-luxurious but fast," and the scheme would give employment to 5,000 Italian shipyard workers.

The scheme has to be approved by the Italian Government and the Swiss Federal Council. The laying of the keels for the two liners will also depend on the passage through the Italian Senate of a new law proposed by Signor Saragat, the Minister for the Merchant Marine, for the facilitation of ship construction.

Economics

Regarding the transfer of French Bonds under Swiss control the "Financial Times" writes in their issue of January 27th:

"A new development has occurred on the question of French assets held in the U.K. under Swiss control.

Recently it was reported that steps had been taken by Swiss banks to avoid the sequestration of these assets, failing full identification. An agreement has now been reached between the Bank of England and the "Office Français des Changes," under which the owners concerned may claim their rights anonymously.

Swiss banks in London are now allowed to transfer to the portfolio of a French bank, which they will choose, all shares threatened with confiscation. They will certify these shares as non-enemy property. Thereafter their assets will be part of the French account and no longer under Swiss management.

The measures of requisitioning foreign shares in French hands now having been lifted by the "Banque de France," the above mentioned shares will be frozen in principle, whereas amounts eligible for transfer, such as dividends and re-imbursements, will be available for redemption in French francs by any importers who will pay the necessary 31 per cent. tax.

This satisfies British policy, to adjust the account and domicile of owners in order to avoid transfers between owners domiciled in hard and soft currency countries respectively. Swiss banks consider the solution satisfactory for their clients, but they regret a substantial loss of volume of business for themselves."

The "Financial Times" writes under the heading: "Swiss State Funds Rise."

"Since the end of last year State funds have risen markedly on Swiss markets despite the partial failure of the Federal loan, issued last November at par, to the amount of 300 million Swiss francs, at $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. for ten years.

It should not be overlooked that in Switzerland companies participating in new issues are different from those that influence market fluctuations. The former are mainly big insurance companies and private social institutions, which more or less impose their conditions according to their cash and economic situation at time of issue. The latter represent the interests of industry, trade and savings, the investments of which are determined by different factors.

The present level of market prices has almost reached the peak established at the end of 1946. Therefore the price of money is now lower than that offered by the Federal Government at the end of November, 1948. Is it likely that interest rates will fall again? The answer given by financial experts here is rather cautious: "According to the general decrease of our imports, which release new assets, and to the redemption policy of the Federal Government, we would say yes; but we would not go that far so long as other important factors are not clarified."

More than 600 million francs of Federal loans will reach maturity this year. The conditions offered for partial conversion will show more clearly the trends of development."

During the week ended January 22nd, gold stocks of the Swiss National Bank rose by Frs.11.5 millions of Frs.5,832 millions.

The influx is ascribed to transfers under payments agreements. Foreign exchange holdings advanced by Frs.9.3 millions to Frs.229 millions.

Notes in circulation declined by Frs.54 millions to Frs.4,240 millions.

"The Financial Times" writes in their issue of the 5th inst. under the heading "The Swiss Impasse" the following:

"Reports yesterday suggested that the discussions between Swiss delegates and our authorities remain sticky. Bargaining seems to be even keener than was expected. No official information is forthcoming but it is believed that whereas the Swiss delegates have made some concessions we have not done so thus far. In usually reliable quarters doubts are expressed whether Berne will permit any further softening. Prospects at the moment are that the discussions may be more prolonged than appeared likely. (The negotiations have in the meantime broken down. Eb.)

The point at issue is the balance of payments position as between our two countries. Our representatives are determined to minimise the potential loss of gold and dollars to Switzerland, but the Swiss are not keen to add to their gold holdings. That is understandable as, not for the first time in recent years, the Swiss authorities are anxious about the inflation which a large gold influx might induce. We would like the Swiss to increase their holdings of sterling beyond the present agreed "ceiling" of £15,000,000, but this the Swiss are not prepared to do — at least, not up to the present.

The Swiss delegation has complained bitterly about the high prices of British goods. They are anxious to acquire our products and would very much like British coal, but they find this very expensive relative to the Polish product. The increased arrivals of Polish coal — transportation by water is becoming much easier — is serious for us. If we could ship coal at a competitive price, virtually all the difficulties now confronting the negotiators would quickly evaporate. The price factor and ability to meet contracts do count now. There still remains the problem of prompt deliveries of British goods; apparently, we have not shown up too well in that respect with some of our wares.

There are, it is true, complicated matters which need to be unravelled and it is to be hoped that, with a little give and take, success will be achieved in that direction. Even the problems of remittances from this country to foreign refugees resident in Switzerland and of purchases by other sterling area countries of Swiss goods should not be insoluble. Certain concessions having been made by the visiting delegation, it may be worth our while to take a chance over the tourism question.

The open issue concerns a little more than £5,000,000 and it is matter for consideration whether we should run the risk of our exporters losing the Swiss market to foreign competitors — a danger which might arise if we were too intractable about tourism. People with no axe to grind feel strongly that a ban on British tourists to Switzerland would be a retrograde step.

These present negotiations between ourselves and Switzerland are important for the trade of Western Europe generally. Prospects of agreement may not seem bright at the moment; yet the picture might easily be changed by a last-minute co-operative effort.

The 19th Salon de L'Automobile at Geneva, to be held from March 17th-27th, promises to be a fine exhibition, for the size and importance of the Swiss Show have grown rapidly in post-War years. This is particularly the case in the commercial-vehicle section, where 54 makes will be exhibited, as against 44 in 1948. There will also be displays by 23 commercial coach-builders, compared with 15 in 1948.

The Show buildings are being enlarged to deal with this increase. The Swiss national industry is to be represented by 17 commercial chassis builders; America by 14, Great Britain nine, France eight, Italy four, Germany one and Austria one.

In November, 1948, the Rossens dam, which blocks the valley of the Sarine River, about 10 miles above the town of Fribourg, was put into service. The new dam is a concrete arched structure, having a height of 272ft., and its crest, which is 1050ft. long, carries a road linking the two banks of the Sarine River. The reservoir it impounds has an area of 3.7 square miles and a length of nearly 7 miles. The annual hydro-electric output of the Rossens dam scheme is estimated at 240,000,000kWh., and the total cost of the dam, which retains some 260,000,000 cubic yards of water, amounted to 65,000,000 Swiss francs.
