The educational reform measures introduced in the canton of Vaud, in 1944 have led to a considerable reduction in the time normally spent in teaching Latin in secondary schools. A further modification has been found necessary during the past year. In the written examinations for the classical baccalauréat candidates no longer have to write an essay in Latin; they are now only required to translate, since the reduction in time spent on Latin in class has necessitated concentrating almost entirely on translation and the reading of prescribed texts. It is felt that this constant comparison of Latin will be beneficial to the teaching of both languages.

Swiss military controls on the German-Austrian border are being tightened following a rush of refugees from Iron Curtain countries.

A plan to build a tower of from 12 to 15 storeys high over the main block of the Palais des Nations was one of the projects discussed by Mr. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations, during a series of conferences which have just ended. Other proposals put forward were: to construct a new wing, to raise the whole of the building by adding a new floor and to add three additional storeys to the Ariana wing. These projects were examined by representatives of the specialized agencies, of the Swiss Government, and of the city and canton of Geneva. No final decision was reached. Pressure on the present space is great and it may be necessary to build annexes for the special agencies on adjacent sites, but it is the intention to keep the Palais des Nations as a centre for international conferences.

Switzerland's small merchant fleet, organised during the war to carry Swiss overseas trade, is still regarded as indispensable to the country's economy. Far from being disbanded, it is being expanded.

Far from being disbanded, it is being expanded.

Eight cargo vessels, two tankers and one wine tanker are now operating under the Swiss flag, the largest being the 9,100-ton "General Guisan." All are privately-owned and operated. Two more cargo vessels of 3,000 tons are under construction.

But Switzerland has no intention of competing with the long-established maritime nations for trade. With no sea outlets of her own, this would be difficult and unprofitable. Swiss shipping operations will be just enough to meet the country's own needs.

There is no confirmation, however, in recent reports that two Atlantic passenger liners are to be operated by Switzerland to carry U.S. tourists to the country.

It is believed that these reports grew out of a proposal by Swiss financiers to use up some of their frozen lire credits in Italy by backing the construction of liners in Italian yards. Such liners would be Italianowned and operated.

The Swiss Federal Railways have compiled a hopeful social survey from a statistical analysis of the ages of engine-drivers over the past 35 years. In 1913 the average age of a Swiss engine-driver was 41, and there were few drivers over fifty. Last year the average age was nearly 49, and 15 per cent. of Swiss drivers were aged between 61 and the retiring age of 65.

Commenting on these figures in its bulletin, the International Transport Workers' Federation observes: "Virtually every driver can now look forward with good prospects to remaining in active service on the footplate until he reaches the compulsory retiring age of 65, whereas thirty years ago very few men were able to continue as drivers once they had reached 50."

The Swiss administration suggests five main causes for the driver's increased working life: the reduction in hours of work from eleven a day to eight, by legislation in 1920; the general adoption of electric traction; a general improvement in social conditions; improved health and increased expectation of life for the population as a whole; and "the appreciable reduction in the consumption of alcohol."

"El Ahram", le plus important des journaux arabes du Proche-Orient écrit: "Nos concitoyens égyptiens apprécient tout particulièrement en Suisse sa liberté et sa neutralité, son sens de la dignité et sa foi dans la paix". Le journal "La bourse égyptienne" qui parait au Caire et à Alexandrie, parlant de la presse suisse, dit que ses vertus sont la culture, la probité intellectuelle, le désintéressement et le courage civique.

Une équipe suisse de gymnastes artistiques à Lisbonne a enthousiasmé 12.000 spectateurs qui ont suivi toutes les représentations avec le plus grand intérêt. Si l'on considère la sympathie témoignée par le public à notre équipe, cette manifestation est un témoignage vibrant de sympathie pour notre pays.

has for the first time transported more than 100,000 passengers in one year.

Swissair has just published their traffic statistics for the year 1948 which show a very considerable increase in the transportation of passengers, as, for the first time since 1931 when Swissair was founded, more than 100,000 passengers have flown with the Swiss national air transport company.

Many more kilometres have been flown, too, but the rate of exploitation is about 10% lower. This decrease is due to the rising competition on the one hand and, on the other hand, to the fact that, although the demand did not increase to the same extent, a greater amount of seats was available than in 1947, larger planes having put in use. However, it will be seen from the figures below that the rate of exploitation for the year 1948 is higher than that of 1938 which it is considered, shows the best pre-war results.

Kilometres flown		1,483,794	2,473,413	4,106,208	6,224,920
Passengers		35,249	62,378	95,519	113,622
Freight (kgs.)		136,309	414,266	878,610	1,224,971
Mail (kgs.)		341,318	259,141	379,092	430,996
Rate of exploitation		55.54%	85.44%	70.10%	60.97%
Regularity	1.12	98.67%	99.31%	99.23%	98.81%
