Economics

The trade agreement which was concluded a few days ago in Berne with an Indian delegation assumes considerable importance on account of the envisaged delivery of capital goods required for the further industrial development of India. The new agreement, which will remain in force until the end of February next year, provides for the shipment of Swiss goods valued at almost 100 million of Swiss francs. These goods include machine tools worth 18 million francs, other machinery amounting to 22 million francs, railway carriages costing five million francs, aluminium and manufactures therefrom, as well as chemical goods aggregating 17 million Swiss francs. India proposes to increase substantially her shipments of a wide range of goods, including manganese ore, raw materials for the chemical industry, timber, jute, hides and skins, and oilseeds.

It is indicated that both the Swiss and the Indian economic authorities are anxious to bring about an intensification of trade relations. In particular, it is hoped that the export of Swiss capital goods will lead to higher invisible exports in the form of services of Swiss technicians and other experts, the payment of royalties and licence fees and so on.

The Swiss cost-of-living index based on June 1914 equalling 100 declined to 216.8 in March from 217.2 in February. That based on the average for August 1939 equalling 100 fell to 158 in March from 158.3 in February.

An interest rate of only $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. is offered on a new 15-year loan of Frs.5 million, which is being raised by the City of St. Gall. Recent offers of this type have carried interest at the rate of 3 per cent.

Most Swiss banks are still paying $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. interest on deposit accounts, but it appears not unlikely that the banks will find it necessary to revise their rates in the near future.

Adrian Aeschbacher a joué à la radio danoise. Le concert au studio a été honoré de la présence du couple royal. Le ballet "Don Quichotte," d'après le livret et la musique de Robert Gerhard, un argovien résidant à Cambridge, a été donné en première au Covent Garden de Londres, avec Margot Fonteyn et Robert Helpman dans les rôles principaux.

THE 34th SWISS INDUSTRIES FAIR IN BASLE.

The Swiss Industries Fair which has just closed its doors was characterised by the fact that the exhibitors, present in just as large numbers as the previous year (2,200), had not placed very great hopes in this year's Fair, owing to the present economic situation.

However, the Fair was a huge success from the point of view of visitors, having attracted something like 650,000 altogether, and this figure was only exceeded in 1948 and 1946. As for foreign buyers, their numbers increase every year; this year more than 10,000 were recorded at the Foreign Visitors Office specially organised for them, and it is known that a large proportion of the visitors from foreign countries omit to have themselves registered by the office in question. Germany was there once again for the first time since the war, and headed the list, followed by France, the Benelux countries, Italy, Austria, Great Britain. For the first time, the number of visitors from overseas exceeded 500.

It is rather difficult to gain an exact idea of the volume of business done at this year's Fair, owing to the fact that opinions vary from one group to another and even amongst firms in the same line of business. Still, it can be said, in a general way, that the exhibitors who sell their goods mainly on the home market were surprised to have to deal with such a steady demand for their goods. This was particularly the case in the furniture section and in the important group comprising domestic supplies, but it also applied to other industrial sectors, e.g., lighting equipment, building materials, etc.

Amongst those firms working specially for export trade, those connected with technical lines such as the electrical industry, machinery and particularly wood-working machinery and textile machinery aroused a great deal of interest amongst foreign visitors. The textile industry, which is leaning more and more towards the home market, has nevertheless still a large number of foreign firms interested in the particular specialities in that line of business. The watchmaking industry is able to hold its own as a result of efforts to make suitable propaganda, but it is meeting increasing difficulties in the form of customs restrictions and quota regulations in other countries.

Mention should also be made of admiring comments heard from foreign visitors about the excellent presentation of the exhibits at the Fair, in a compact and well ordered display of Swiss industrial production in all its varied aspects, and that is assuredly not the least of the successes booked by the Swiss Industries Fair in Basle this year.

The next Swiss Industries Fair will be held in Basle from the 7th to the 17th April, 1951.
