THE FOUNTAINS OF BERNE.

That pleasing feature, the public fountain, is nowhere in Europe in more abundant evidence than in the towns and villages of Switzerland. Many of them are exquisite artistic creations and their style ranges from the Gothic to Renaissance, from Baroque to just utilitarian.

Perhaps the most perfect of such artistic fountains are found in Berne where they are remarkable for both their number and their admirable setting. The wide streets and squares in which they are placed form a background from which they stand out in all their beauty. Not only are they admirable expressions of their builders' art, they also represent something of the town's cultural history, notably the influence of the Renaissance period. To this period belong the "Schützenbrunnen" (1527); the Seilerbrunnen (Käfigturm 1549); the Ryfflibrunnen (1540-50); the Dudelsackspfeifer (1507); the Zähringerbrunnen (1542); the Samsonbrunnen (1544); and many others, all creations of the 16th century. One of the most charming of these is the quaint Kindlifresser, built between 1540 and 1550, picturing the ogre with a collection of babies in his bag and a procession of bears around its column.

Classical fountains of the eighteenth century are also to be found but they are quite eclipsed by the older erections we have enumerated.

The fountains, of course, are not the only attractions offered to the visitor to Berne. The town itself, founded in the 12th century by the Dukes of Zähringen, is of great historical interest. Its ground plan is much the same as it was hundreds of years ago and its arcades give it a distinctive character and peculiar charm.

For the benefit of the tourist, the Verkehrsverein der Stadt Bern has published an illustrated folder and map with notes in four languages, one in English. Anyone visiting Berne will be well advised to obtain a copy, he will find it useful and instructive. To quote from the English version: "the fountains ... will tell you their own stories. Go and see them, look and listen!"
