The Swiss Government has submitted to the Federal Assembly proposals for supplementary credits for rearmament and for the extension of military service in the Swiss armoured corps. This is considered as a timely reaffirmation of Switzerland's policy of maintaining ready and up-to-date defences regardless of political fluctuations.

The rearmament programme quoted two and a half years ago and providing for an expenditure of 1,463.3 million Swiss francs has been fulfilled to a large extent, according to the Federal Council. Up to the end of 1952, 569.9 million Swiss francs were actually spent; in addition current orders represent 401.8 millions; orders that were drawn up but that have not yet been placed account for 300.3 millions; and contemplated purchases for 410.5 millions. Thus, the rearmament programme is expected to cost 1,682.5 millions (about £137 millions), and this figure exceeds the originally planned expenditure by 219.2 millions (about £18 millions), the amount which the Swiss Government is now asking Parliament to approve.

The items which seem to be getting priority are armoured vehicles and jet planes. This confirms the
