"British Festival" — a two-word title with which everybody in Zürich has become familiarised in the last few days by posters and newsreels, press and radio, describes exactly a group of extremely interesting events held in June, designed to cement the traditional friendship and promote the mutual trade between the British and Swiss peoples, aided by the cordial support of the governments and the economic and cultural organisations of the two countries.

Among the most conspicuous items of the programme is the exhibition "Made in England," organised by the British Chamber of Commerce in Switzerland, at which 130 British firms displayed products typical for their superlative quality and superb precision — from jet engines, machine tools and milling machines to textiles, television sets and books. No other foreign Chamber in Switzerland has ever ventured to organise an exhibition on this scale. Another exhibition, organised by the British Council, named "Formschaffen in England" ("British Industrial Design") held in the Museum of Applied Art, Zürich, consists of an ingeniously arranged display of new British designs in fabrics, china, glass, household utensils, basket ware, fishing tackle and even sailing boats made of plastics. Both of these exhibitions have drawn thousands of keenly interested businessmen and sightseers.

Besides that, Zürich cinemas are displaying British films, Zürich theatres are staging British plays, and Zürich concert halls are offering British music. Two London buses are plying regularly for trade with notable success along Zürich's chief thoroughfares, and the Band of the 1st Dragoon Guards have given many performances of British popular airs.

Indicative of the deep significance attached by the authorities of both countries to this Anglo-Swiss demonstration are the numerous public speeches made by the British Minister of Supply, Mr. Duncan Sandys, the British Ambassador to Switzerland, Sir Patrick Scrivener, and two Swiss Federal Councillors, Rübattel and Weber, at events attended by many prominent British and Swiss leaders of industry, commerce and banking.

At the lunch given by the British Chamber of Commerce on June 20, Mr. Duncan Sandys, opening the "Made in England" Exhibition, said:

"Yesterday is was my privilege to inaugurate the impressive British Festival here in Zürich. . . . We all greatly admire the way in which you in Switzerland have solved your economic problems. Through hard work, skill and enterpris, you have achieved a level of prosperity and contentment which is the envy of the world. . . .

"Selling goods in Switzerland is, of course, not an easy matter, for every other country is trying to do the same. Here among the Swiss mountains, traders from all over the world meet the keen air of competition.

"But British industry has never been afraid of competition. It thrives on it. We know that our economic existence depends upon holding our own on equal terms with the industries of other countries. We realise also that artificial restrictions are harmful. In the long run, they are harmful even to those whom they are designed to benefit, because they encourage inefficiency and artificially divert the flow of trade into less economic channels.

"The fact that an article can be sold in Switzerland is in itself a testimonial. For you Swiss are very exacting customers. You insist on high quality and reject what is inferior. Worst of all, you insist on getting value for your money.

"We are therefore most gratified by the way in which the sale of British goods to Switzerland has risen in recent years. Although there was some decline in 1952, none the less British exports to Switzerland are nearly three times greater than before the war. Our export trade with other countries has, of course, been expanding also, but the increase in our exports to Switzerland has been nearly twice as great as the increase in our exports to the world as a whole."

Hugo Kobelt (Switzerland) won the 1953 Tour de Suisse cycling race covering the 1,100 miles in 50h. 22min. 11sec.

The final lap of 153 miles, from St. Moritz to Zürich was raced in torrential rain and thunderstorms, but Kobelt, who had been about five minutes ahead of his nearest rival, managed to treble his advantage.

Kobelt now goes on for the Tour de France, one of cycling's greatest races, and is strongly fancied to win.

The Swiss authorities claim to have discovered a "sixth column" network in Geneva. Mr. Paul Moroge, the managing director of "Arba Ltd.," has been arrested on charges of issuing forged Swiss import licences to certain Western exporters who had thereby been enabled to obtain export licences from their respective Governments for strategic materials, which were then transhipped behind the Iron Curtain.

The prompt action taken by the Swiss authorities proves once again that Switzerland is bent on maintaining a scrupulous policy of neutrality in the field of international trade. According to a statement issued in Berne by the Federal Ministry for Public Affairs, Mr. Moroge is alleged to have obtained genuine import-licence forms to which he attached forged stamps and signatures.

By a decree dated January 30, 1951, the Swiss Federal Government introduced import licences in order to safeguard the necessary supplies for the national economy, since the Western countries had refused to authorise the export of strategic goods, including non-ferrous metals, unless an official certificate was issued testifying that the imported materials would not be re-exported. The management board of "Arba Ltd." denied any knowledge of the alleged frauds of its managing director.
