Plans are now well ahead for this year's celebrations in St. Gall of the traditional Children's Festival, which is held there every two years. It starts on a Tuesday, June 30, when all the schoolchildren form a procession to climb the picturesquely-named Rosenberg (hill of roses) watched by hundreds of thousands of spectators. There the children will sing, play games and take part in competitions. The Children's Festival in turn pays tribute to the famous St. Gall textile industry, some of whose products, in the form of colourful costumes, will be on show. And one of the highlights, from the culinary point of view, will be the offering of the traditional roast sausages.
