A first report on the results of experimental television transmissions by the Swiss broadcasting authorities (General-Direktion PTT,) suggests that interest on the part of the public has not been very great. Doubtless this is because of the somewhat restricted programmes sent out by the experimental transmitter at Uetliberg, near Zurich, amounting to one hour only in the evenings of five days a week, as well as the general expectation that colour television will shortly be on the market.

At the end of November, 1953, there were only about 300 to 400 subscribers, whereas some 100,000, on a fee of Frs. 60 each, would be needed to cover the cost of a reasonable programme. The competent authorities are somewhat concerned therefore as to the future of the experimental service, since the credit originally granted will soon be exhausted.

On the other hand, a proposal has been put forward for the establishment of an organisation, capitalised at Fr. 100,000, to develop television in Geneva by equipping a TV centre at Mon-Répos which would operate in addition to any eventual local transmitter.

According to a decree passed in 1909, the sale of dogs and cats for human consumption was prohibited in Switzerland. Some of the cantons, however, asked for concessions, and in 1938 a decree was issued allowing certain cantons to sell the flesh of dogs and cats with certain restrictions, and only in their own territory, most of the cantons did not make use of this concession.

The Federal Council has now, as previously, prohibited the commerce with dogs and cats for culinary purposes throughout Switzerland. [A.T.S.]

A report published by the Swiss Federal Railways states that a great many travellers on the national network do not pay full rates. Only about 34% of train travellers (both from abroad and resident in the country) really pay full tariff — that is to say, only a little over one-third of Swiss train passengers. A very high percentage of season tickets at reduced rates are issued and, on the whole, therefore, Swiss railway travel is not so expensive as people say.

Swiss exhibition of Agriculture 1954.

It has been learnt that the Swiss National Exhibition of Agriculture, which is to take place in Lucerne from the 16th September to the 11th October, 1954, will occupy a superficial area of 200,000 square metres. It will bring together thirty-five professional groups, for, in addition to agriculture proper, the Exhibition will also comprise sylviculture, aboriculture, game preserves and fishing. Its organisers have set for themselves the aim of drawing attention to the importance of agriculture in Switzerland's economy.

Needless to say, that the dairy industry will occupy a prominent position. The public will be shown, in a plastical and suggestive form, what considerable efforts have been made in order to improve the quality of the milk supplied to consumers. It will be possible to see the functioning of a dairy, equipped with the most modern plant and with the indispensable laboratory, as well as an urban butter distributing centre, and, also, that very latest discovery of science, a plant for the "uperisation" of milk. A special exhibition will show the public all the principal kinds of cheese manufactured in Switzerland.
