The Lower House of the Swiss Parliament decided to defer until its March session the final vote on the proposed purchase of 100 Centurion tanks from Britain. The delay is due to a difference of opinion between the two Houses and to a procedural error in the Lower House. As the Swiss newspapers put it, for the second time the discussion on armoured vehicles and anti-armour weapons has ended in a complete muddle.

The Geneva guide René Lambert, who led an expedition in the Gauri Sankar group in the Himalayas, returned to Geneva. The object of the expedition was not to attempt scaling Gauri Sankar (23,400ft.) — unless conditions were found perfect — but to explore and map the region, which is mostly unknown. The party succeeded in this, and has brought back photographs, sketches, and measurements which will make it possible to draw a complete map of the group, although the work was hampered by the monsoon, which lasted 10 days longer than usual.

Mr. Lambert and his partner, Mrs. Kogan, of Nice, tried to climb Cho Oyu. On a first attempt they met the Austrians who scaled that peak on October 19, and a second attempt was foiled by bad weather. The botanist of the expedition is bringing back seeds of some 1,200 Himalayan plants which he intends trying to grow in Switzerland.

Max, a 12-year-old Zurich boy, wanted to make some money to help his ailing and widowed mother.

He advertised in a local newspaper, offering to act as dog-sitter.

A few hours after the advertisement appeared, Max received enough offers to look after dogs to take up all his time after school.

But after his first week as Zurich's No. 1 dogsitter, Max was in trouble. Twice he arrived late for school and with no homework done.

What could he do, Max asked his teacher, "with all those people wanting their dogs taken for walks or kept company when they go out in the evening?"

The teacher saw there was a real problem. He called for volunteers among Max's schoolmates willing to take turns at sharing Max's duties.

Today Max has ten regular schoolboy helpers in Dog Sitters Ltd., and all indications are that the company is here to stay.

Swiss industry is to the fore in the production of snow-clearing machines. The latest machine is a 200 h.p. snow plough making it possible even at the height of winter to keep certain Alpine roads open to traffic. Postal buses can thus go through the snow-covered passes of Julier, Maloja, Ofen (in the Grisons) and Les Mosses (in the Alps of Vaud).

The radar installations of the Zurich-Kloten airport which took three years to construct have just been completed. They consist of a radar interception apparatus and a precision radar for landing. The cost of the installation amounted to about 1.85 million francs. It makes Zurich-Kloten one of the best equipped airports in the world.

An entirely modern new theatre capable of being used for symphony concerts, opera, ballet and musical shows has just been completed at Lausanne in the main building of the Swiss Comptoir. Possessing a large, very deep, operatic stage, and seating 1,900, it is the work of a Lausanne architect, Marcel Mailard, who took as his inspiration the classical French conception with a central dome and semi-circular balcony. The stage is 85 feet wide and 43 feet deep. It is closed by a sliding partition which when opened makes it possible to extend the stage a further 69 feet. The acoustics are perfect, thanks to the walnut panelling which forms an elegant and warm setting. Lausanne will now be able to welcome the greatest orchestras as well as the largest opera companies, ballets and musical shows.

The 1955 Locarno Film Festival will be held from July 9th to 19th. It will probably coincide with a UNESCO meeting devoted to ethnography.

The St. Gall Football Club, the oldest in Switzerland, recently celebrated the 75th anniversary of its foundation; although the minutes of the first meeting are missing from the club's records, the club nevertheless possesses a copy of statutes dated April 19th, 1839.
