SWISS WINE TASTING.

Recently I received an invitation to attend a Tasting of Swiss Wines at Dr. Johnson's House, 17, Gough Square, Fleet Street, E.C.4.

It is the second time that I have taken part in such a function — if one may call it thus. On the first occasion, some 18 months ago, it took place at the Bush House Restaurant, Aldwych, when it was attended principally by wine merchants, hoteliers and restaurateurs. Then, the Tasters, after a sip or two, promptly and without much ceremony, spat it out into trays specially provided for this purpose.

The Tasting on October 21st somewhat differed from the former; this time the invitation was in the first instance reserved for the Press, and all my Fleet Street colleagues attended in full force. There were no trays provided, nor was there any "spitting". Bottle after bottle was emptied with alarming celerity.

Pretty Swiss maidens in national costume were in attendance looking after the guests well.

No better place than Dr. Johnson's House could have been chosen; first, it is in the immediate vicinity of Fleet Street, and secondly, transforming it temporarily, at least, into a "Tavern", was in accordance with what the learned Doctor said about such establishments, namely, "There is nothing which has yet been contrived by man, by which so much happiness is produced as by a good Tavern".

From an attractive booklet which was handed to the visitors one gathered that the following vintage wines were to be sampled: "La Côte", "Mont-sur-Rolle", "Lavaux" of the Vaud region; "Fendant", "Johannisberg", "Goutte d'or" and "Dôle" from the Valais; "Neuchâtel" (Ct. Neuchâtel) and "Mandement" (Ct. Geneva).

In the illustrated booklet entitled "Terres Romandes" the Vaudois wines were described rather amusingly as "crisp, playful, a bit naughty, sometimes even daring", whilst the Valaisan wines were mentioned as "velvety, full bodied and generous". The excellent "Dôle", to which I stuck, fully deserved the following mentioning: "has a brilliant ruby that reminds one of the glowing sunset on the Alps". After having imbibed — perhaps more generously than wisely — of this "brilliant ruby", I began to see more than "one sunset"!

This Wine Tasting was arranged by Messrs. Voice and Vision Ltd., of 107, Baker Street, W.1, which firm I understand has been entrusted by the Swiss wine growers with their propaganda to make known their vintage wines to the British public, and I sincerely hope that they will be successful in their endeavours. Judging from the "glowing" faces of some of the Tasters, I have no doubts that they found the "samples" to their liking.

On leaving Dr. Johnson's House with an English colleague, who very likely tasted the wine described as "a bit naughty, sometimes even daring", I realised that the saying in vino veritas is no idle boast.

Among the many guests attending were Dr. R. Faessler, Commercial Counsellor, and Monsieur Marcel Luy, 1st Secretary at the Swiss Embassy.
