EASTER 1957.

Easter once more reminds us that the flowering of new life which follows the wintry season carries with it a message of hope to all thinking men. The rebirth of nature, the miracle of spring, is a phenomenon visible to our senses that needs no effort of comprehension, but the great mystery of life after death remains hidden under an impenetrable veil. Nothing can pierce this veil but a simple faith in the Christian revelation with its implication of a resurrection. Spiritual comfort and unshaken hope are the reward of those who possess such faith.

In our daily lives and in the affairs of international politics, the need for hope is as great as ever. As we look around we become aware of the lack of stability and the threat of disaster that confront humanity. Yet most of us, to whatever country and political or religious persuasion we may belong, yearn for a "detente" and for peace. This applies not only to the international position but also to the never-ending industrial disputes. The world seems to pass through a crisis of re-adjustment and it is not easy, at the present moment, to get a clear view of the future. All we can do is to hold on to Hope, hope for goodwill, peace and understanding among the nations no less than in the economic field.
