VARIOUS.

Researches undertaken early this year, after it was announced that traces of uranium had been found in the mountains of Valais, have made it clear that there are two layers containing uranium in the rocks which extend over the Great St. Bernard group. One layer is at Iserables, the other at Sarreyer. The scientists who have examined the deposits are now studying the layers with a view to ascertaining whether it would be profitable to start major works in these mountains — at a height of about 3,500 ft. — and to extract the uranium.

Visitors to the Swiss glacier village and resort of Grindelwald in the Bernese Oberland can now get close up to the towering "forehead" of the imposing Grindelwald glacier by way of a newly constructed easy footpath. Part of the old trail leads through the gorge of the so-called "Lower Glacier" over a foot-bridge which was first built in 1875 and torn away many times by avalanches, rock slides and floods. The new path has been partly hewn in the solid rock and is described as "perfectly safe". Taking in the gorge on a length of several hundred yards, it affords,

The municipal authorities of Fischenthal in the romantic Toess Valley of the Zurich Qberland have recently turned over to the public their new community-owned Gasthof zur Blume, a typical Swiss country inn featuring not only guest rooms and two restaurants but also a combined ballroom and theatre for the villagers. The inn had been known for centuries as a favourite stop-over for pilgrims to the famous Marian shrine of Einsiedeln in Central Switzerland.

The Swiss Government recently recommended a speedy start on construction work on the planned Geneva-Lausanne highway, which was described as an "urgent necessity". Based on the new federal regulations on the improvement of the Swiss motor-road network, which were approved through plebiscite on 6th July last, the building of the 40-mile-long four-lane motor-way alongside Lake Geneva is to start early next year, and must be completed by 1964, in time for the Swiss National Exhibition at Lausanne. It is estimated that between 10,000 and 20,000 passenger cars daily will use the new highway.

Traffic noise is outlawed in the lovely little valleys of Val Roseg and Val dal Fain in the neighbourhood of the glamorous Swiss resort of Pontresina, Grisons. A general ban on motor traffic in these valleys was imposed recently.

The first "Mot-Hotel" — a combination of the traditional hotel type and a modern motel — was inaugurated recently at Sachseln, Central Switzerland. The "Touring Club of Switzerland", one of Switzerland's two leading motorists' associations, had the historic, 500-year-old "Kreuz" Inn completely modernised and supplemented by four up-to-date motel units. The "Kreuz" mot-hotel is Touring-Club's first try-out in this field; more Swiss mot-hotels are planned for Ragaz Spa, Eastern Switzerland, and Vira, Ticino.
