The Swiss Parliament (Lower House) recently approved a Government proposal to reorganize the country's defence forces. Voting was 105 for and 5 against, with most of the Socialists and Independent members abstaining.

The Government's reorganisation plan, which will extend over four years, called for the establishment of three mechanized divisions, stronger Air Force ground defences, and an increase in the number of fighter aircraft. A decision to purchase a new interceptor aircraft to re-equip the Air Force is expected in the near future, with the choice still unknown between a number of foreign types which have been evaluated.

To meet part of the cost of the plan, the Government had proposed reducing the infantry strength by 13 battalions and abolishing the cavalry. An opposition amendment, however, defeated the proposal to reduce the infantry and succeeded in the retention of 18 out of the current 25 cavalry squadrons.

At the session some members criticized M. Chaudet, the Defence Minister, on his proposal to buy eleven second-hand Centurion tanks from South Africa because of that country's racial policies. When put to the vote the purchase proposal was upheld by 94 to 44.

Prince Rainier and Princess Grace of Monaco paid an official visit to the Swiss Confederation, from Tuesday to Thursday, 8th to 10th November 1960.

They were welcomed at the Berne station by Monsieur Max Petitpierre, President of the Swiss Confederation, who was accompanied by Madame Petitpierre. The distinguished visitors, on arriving at the Palais Fédéral, were introduced to the members of the Federal Council. In the evening they were the guests of the Swiss Government at a State banquet. On Wednesday, Prince Rainier and Princess Grace were taken on an excursion to Neuchâtel, where they were officially received by members of the cantonal government at the castle of Neuchâtel. The following day they opened an exhibition at the Casino in Berne dealing with the principality of Monaco, and a luncheon offered by the Federal Council at the "Lohn" followed. In the evening, a dinner was given to the members of the Federal Council by Prince Rainier and Princess Grace, after which the national orchestra of Monaco gave a concert at the Casino. On the Friday morning the visitors took leave of Monsieur Petitpierre and Madame Petitpierre.
