national campaign against noise, building operations are being suspended during the summer season. The entertainment programme contains some 60 events including International Competitions for Skiing, Skating and Curling.

Davos, one of Switzerland's oldest and most popular summer resorts and winter sports centres, is to improve its sports facilities. In an effort to extend the ice-skating season — from early November till around Easter, which traditionally marks the last peak of the skiing period — the local authorities plan to replace the ice-hockey stadium by an artificial ice-rink which is expected to be completed for the 1960-61 winter sports season. Earmarked for an early opening in the summer of 1961 is a new nine-hole golf course and country-club house.

The Spa of Bad Ragaz has recently inaugurated its second indoor swimming pool, which may be used by the general public in the afternoons, the mornings being reserved for the hotel guests taking cures.

The golf course has been enlarged to 18 holes and a number of improvements have been carried out in the Spa and the hotels.

Great importance is attached to the new method for registering various aspects of the blood circulation with apparatus constructed by Drs. Fenyves and Gut, of Bale. It permits more reliable diagnosis and at the same time the new method is appreciated by the patients as the unpleasant needle can be dispensed with.

Switzerland, the land of world-famous private schools, possesses a good many excellent commercial schools which are grouped in an association of their own within the scope of the Federation of Associations of Swiss Private Schools. A descriptive folder recently issued by this association lists 21 commercial schools in French-speaking Switzerland and a total of 18 in the German- and Italian-speaking parts of the country.

Europe's most progressive and modernistic "village" is Wettingen (population 18,000), which has rapidly outgrown all other towns in the Canton Aargau, including the neighbouring spa and industrial centre of Baden. In order to cope with further developments which are expected to bring the population up to 40,000 within the next few years, town-planners are busy building a completely new city with an ultra-modern civic centre. Near the new glass-and-chromium town hall several sky-scraper apartment houses with accommodation for hundreds of families are now under construction.

Saas-Fee, one of the most charming summer and winter resorts in the Valais Alps, recently extended its high-Alpine suspension railway as far up as the 9,300-foot-high Längfluh, thus opening up new roads into the realm of Canton Valais's sky-high peaks. At the same time, the motor-road in the Saas valley was improved. Yet motor-cars remain banned from the village proper, which is one of Switzerland's few traffic-free oases. Cars are to be parked in the "automobile terminus" outside the village.

357 new hotels, accommodating a total of 8,342 persons, were opened in Switzerland last year. The average of less than 24 guest beds per hotel shows that the Swiss hotel trade continues to stick to one of its time-honoured principles: Quality comes before Quantity.

Vevey and Montreux, two gay lakeside cities and resorts on Lake Geneva, are busy preparing their traditional "Musical September", or 15th International Music Festival, to take place from 31st August to 6th October. Among the guest performers are the Symphony Orchestra of the North-German Radio in Hamburg, the National Orchestra of Paris, the Choir of the St. Hedwiga's Cathedral of Berlin, and the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande of Geneva. The soloists include Clara Haskil, Wilhelm Backhaus, Pierre Fournier, Nathan Milstein, Zino Francescatti, Artur Schnabel, Geza Anda, Robert Casadesu and Isaac Stern.

A new type of underground garage is now under construction in Geneva. It consists of a circular wall with a surface of 2,500 square metres, into which the car-boxes are built. The structure will be completed above the ground and is then to be sunk into the earth by its own weight. For this purpose the cylindrical wall, in its lower part, is knife-shaped and equipped with a sharp metallic edge. It is expected that it will sink some four inches a day after the scaffolding is removed.

A large-scale Swiss costume festival, which is to be held in Basel on 2nd and 3rd September next year, is already being planned. For the first time in the history of these traditional Swiss folklore festivals there will be two official parades — a daylight procession, and a night parade which is to feature some unusual aspects of Swiss folklore.

Richard Wagner and Queen Victoria of England — the latter, in 1868, ordered a regular expedition to be set up in order to carry her up to the legend-haunted Mt. Pilatus above Lucerne — are just two of the many celebrities who signed the guest book of the Bellevue mountain-top inn which recently became 100 years old. Since 1889, visitors to Mt. Pilatus, which formerly was known as the "Fräkmünt" (from the Latin "Mons Fractus" — "Fissured Mountain"), instead of relying on mules, horses and sedan chairs, have by the million used the cog-wheel railway to climb this fabulous look-out peak in the heart of Switzerland.

The Swiss mountain guides and ski instructors, Xavier Kalt and René Droz, have just announced the inauguration of a Summer and Winter Alpinist Centre at La Fouly (5,300 feet), Val Ferret, Canton Valais. The hamlet of La Fouly is reached from Martigny in the Rhône Valley by mountain railway to Orsière, and from there by postal motor-coach. The seven-day alpinist courses for beginners and advanced afford a complete training in rock-climbing, ice-walking, roping and step-hewing, followed by mountaineering expeditions throughout the Swiss Mont Blanc area. Enrolments can be made for any period between June and 30th September. In the spring, high-Alpine ski-excursions will be organized from La Fouly.

The boring of the tunnel from the Zmutt valley above Zermatt to Bricolla in Val d'Hérens has just been completed after four years' work. It is nearly 12 miles long and, after the Simplon (12½ miles), the longest Alpine tunnel.

It is to be used for diverting, during the summer, the waters dammed in the higher Zermatt glen into an artificial lake which feeds the turbines of the Grande Dixence hydroelectric plant near Sion in the Rhône valley. The lake, formed by the erection of a 300 foot dam, is being raised by the building of a new dam which when finished two years hence will be the highest in the world — nearly 900 feet.

The new tunnel will, every summer, bring nearly 524 million cubic yards of water to the artificial lake.

A concession has been granted for the building of a hydroelectric power plant in the valley of Saas (Ct. Valais). It will be fed by the waters of the river Visp (the "Saaser Visp") and those of an artificial lake to be created at Mattmark (6,890 feet). The building of a dam at the outlet of the Mattmark glen will in fact re-create the lake which existed at Mattmark many years ago and was reduced to a marshy plain by the sand and rubble brought down by the torrents.

The new lake will be bigger than the original one and it will cover a wider area, as the famous "Blaue Stein", the huge serpentine block deposited by the Schwarzegg glacier at the southern end of the glen, will be under water. The builders of the plant say that there will be enough water in the Visp lower down in the valley once the dam is finished, but some people fear that lack of water along the path of the Visp may be harmful to plants and trees.
