GOOD TRAINING IS THE MOUNTAINEER'S BEST INSURANCE

More and more people have come to realise that, with many kinds of sport, even those which are strictly recreational activities, thorough basic training is the best assurance of full pleasure. This has become generally accepted for tennis, riding and ski-ing. Now, according to Fritz Luchsinger, the Swiss Alpine Club's Chief of Training and Tours and one of the first two men to climb the 28,000-ft. Lhotse in the Himalayas in 1956, a growing number of mountain climbers of all ages and both sexes are beginning to realise that we go up into the mountains for pleasure, to derive joy from nature and to experience our ability as human beings to meet any emergency. Switzerland already boasts a number of renowned mountaineering schools. Prominent among them are: the Rosenloui Mountain Climbing Institute (Bernese Oberland); the Silvretta Mountaineering School (Klosters); the Pontresina Mountaineering Centre; the Ecole d'alpinisme La Fouly (Val Ferret, in the Valais), and the Kreuzberg Climbing School (with branches in Arolla, on the Furka Pass, and in Fiesch, Valais). These worthy institutions provide fundamental training in climbing in rock and snow, firn and ice, simple climbing and traverse work, self-help, the use of available technical aids, orientation with map and compass. An alpinist trained in a good school is capable of avoiding the dangerous pitfalls represented by over-fatigue, over-estimation of one's capacities, and assorted external natural hazards.
