NEWS FROM THE COLONY

CITY SWISS CLUB

Summer Dance

One of the post-war traditions of the City Swiss Club is the summer outing. After two years at Monkey Island, the Committee decided to go back to Great Fosters near Egham in Surrey. The unqualified success of the evening on 27th June showed clearly that the decision was a wise one, and Mr. Lucien Jobin and his helpers must be pleased that their hard work was so much appreciated.

Great Fosters is one of Britain's finest country house hotels in beautiful surroundings. It has many historic connections, having been partly built by Henry VIII. Queen Elizabeth I used it as a Hunting Lodge, as did Anne Boleyn and James I.

Drinks before dinner were taken out of doors in the splendid gardens, as the weather was most clement. The President and Mrs. Alfred Kuhn received the guests who included the Swiss Ambassador and Madame Keller as well as a number of other members of the Embassy.

The reason why the Club left Great Fosters a couple of years ago was that the food was not all one could wish. Whilst that reason would still hold good, I repeat what I wrote then: On an evening like that it is the good fellowship and the enjoyment of dancing and a happy atmosphere which matters; food is of secondary importance. And as far as ambiance and cheer were concerned, the Tithe Barn could not have provided a better background. Dancing was never neglected, and the wine glasses were filled again and again until 1 o'clock.

It was a good evening thoroughly enjoyed by members and friends and not least by — the Ladies.

APPENZELL COMES TO ESSEX

On the banks of the River Stour, in the heart of the Constable country, stands a beautiful sixteenth-century house, a few steps down from a main motor road, yet so quiet and peaceful that one easily forgets that one is near the busy city of Colchester in thriving Essex. The place is Dedham, and the house Le Talbooth Restaurant. Did I say peaceful?

Certainly not on the two evenings of 3rd and 4th July when the marquees in the grounds of the Talbooth were full of boisterous and jolly life, not to say noise. Both evenings were given over to Switzerland, more precisely to Appenzell, for it was the famous Alder Band, complete with Hackbrett and yodelling, which provided music for dancing. But it was not only the colourful Appenzell costumes which brightened up the tents — the whole place was gaily decorated with flags, flowers and bunting. It said "Après ski" was to be the dress, but for once it was too warm even in England to turn up in ski-ing trousers and thick knitwear. And the majority of women were in summer dresses and the men in casual suits. But as the evening went on, the dancing to the swinging folklore band became more energetic and the Swiss wines warmed heads and hearts more and more, men discarded their jackets, and informality took over rapidly. One never really connects Bratwürste (from the Swiss Centre Restaurants in London) potato salad, Chäscheuchli and Chuchipastetti with formal dining and supping, nor trestle tables, however nicely set. It was just what the organisers set out to achieve, gay, light-hearted evenings with the atmosphere of a Swiss folklore festival. What was surprising were the large numbers, several hundred guests each evening! Few Swiss among them, at least not obviously, but a very, very large number of British friends of Switzerland, and I have heard it said that if they had not been on arrival, they certainly became such during the evening! And when the indefatigable band finally packed up their instruments, their music was played on records, and the musicians themselves showed how a real Ländler should be danced. The guests left in a happy mood, but Anglo-Swiss or Appenzell-Essex friendships were sealed in the bar of the Talbooth until early hours of the two mornings.

Much of the success of the evening must be attributed to the proprietor of the Talbooth, Mr. Gerald M. W. Milsom, whose initiative was the basis for the special Festival Week in general and the two Swiss evenings in particular. His house is well known for good food and attentive service; for years he has had Appenzell waitresses and other

Swiss staff. Swiss Fair Ltd. of London's Swiss Centre and the Swiss National Tourist Office have co-operated, and the result was certainly a very happy time for something nearing 1,000 people — most of them genuine friends of Switzerland.
