misty and silent sprawl of London below. The Ambassador, a throng of press reporters, the Swiss tourism officials and all the jet-set had to go out in the cold on the platform where the mast stood. The henchmen of Bond's arch-enemy Blofeld (the baddy in the film) had some trouble in lifting the flag. Eventually it went up, a majestic "007" sign spread on a fifteen by fifteen foot expanse of canvas. The wind was blowing hard and we had to tug at it while the photographers took dozens of pictures of it, full-blown, with the Ambassador and the starlets holding the cord together. Father Bossard was there too, snapping away with his super-duper Konika camera with telescopic lenses.

When the show had ended I met the Ambassador (the fourth time in eight days) and he told me that Ambassadors were called upon to perform variegated duties. He did point out, however, that he might have hesitated somewhat to be on the "Miss World" panel of judges!

We returned to the S.N.T.O. premises and drank Swiss beverages to recover from the cold. The film "On Her Majesty's Service" will have its world première on December 18th at the Odeon Theatre, Leicester Square. In the meanwhile, an elaborate James Bond exhibition will be mounted in the Swiss Centre.

SKI CAMPS FOR YOUNG SWISS ABROAD

As in previous years, the Youth Service of the Secretariat of the Swiss Abroad, Alpenstrasse 26, 3000 Berne, are arranging ski camps. The one at Christmas is booked up, but there are two more, one from 2nd to 13th March at Riederalp in the Valais, and one from 31st March to 10th April at Klewenalp in Nidwalden, especially suitable for beginners and mediocre skiers. All information may be had from the Secretariat.

Young Swiss living abroad may like to make a note of the summer camp which will take place in Western Switzerland from 26th July to 15th August.

All these camps are extremely well organised, and they provide an excellent opportunity for young people to mix not only with other compatriots from abroad, but also to get to know their country of origin. For little money — in case of hardship there is a contribution — a great deal off is offered, and there is something of interest for everybody. There are discussions, community singing, excursions and a lot of "don't miss the Swiss". The organisers are anxious that the young Auslandschweizer not only enjoy a good holiday, but that they should get to know their country thoroughly and in a way which the tourists are not able to do. So don't hesitate and enquire straight away — it is well worth while.

DISPENSARE FRANCAIS

Pendant tous ces derniers mois, les médecins consultants ont continué avec un extrême dévouement et en dépit des conditions matérielles défavorables, à assurer un service de consultation au Dispensaire Français.

Les travaux d'aménagement du nouveau Dispensaire se poursuivent activement et il est espéré que le nouveau Dispensaire ouvrira ses portes avant la fin de l'année. Dans des locaux modernes et fonctionnels le Dispensaire pourra poursuivre ainsi la tradition séculaire de l'ancien Hôpital Français et offrir à tous les Français ou Francophones de condition modeste un service complet de consultations gratuites. Dès l'emménagement dans les nouveaux locaux, nous ferons connaître largement les nouveaux horaires de consultation mais d'ores et déjà, on peut dire que les consultations seront plus fréquentes et que nous envisageons également des consultations en fin de journée, pour permettre aux personnes employées de bénéficier des services du Dispensaire.

La future adresse du nouveau Dispensaire Français sera:

Jellicoe House,
4, Osnaburgh Street,
London, N.W.1.

(Jellicoe House est pratiquement en face de la station de l'Underground Great Portland Street).

Nous regrettons d'annoncer le décès du Docteur Robert Rowe, qui fut pendant 30 ans attaché comme Chirurgien à l'ancien Hôpital Français. Il avait pris sa retraite en 1934 et est décédé l'été dernier dans le Midi de la France, où il s'était retiré avec sa femme. (RLT)

JOSEPH GUGGENHEIM 90

Few reach the age of 90, and in the Swiss Community in Great Britain it is a very rare event indeed. On 15th December, Mr. J. L. Guggenheim, of 71 Hamilton Terrace, N.W.8, will celebrate his 90th birthday. A couple of years ago a mistake cropped into the S.O. birthday column, and I gave his age inadvertently as 10 years younger. If I did this today, nobody would query it on seeing "Guggie", for he certainly does not look his age. He was born at Baden in 1879, and learned his trade, that of tailoring, in Zurich before coming to London in 1900 to learn cutting. 60 years ago, he founded the firm of Guggenheim and Peacock. He fostered fine craftsmen such as the Stanburys and has enjoyed long associations with Donald Chambers, a co-director who was with him for well over fifty years, and Thomas Cairns, another director, chief cutter since 1946.

Every aspect of the craft — making, cutting, buying and selling — has given him satisfaction and pleasure, possibly because he has followed his own advice: "Take interest in your work. If you want to succeed in any profession you must love it".

Mr. Guggenheim believes that most of the changes he has lived through in the trade have been for the better. Working conditions, for instance. He also considers that standards are higher and young tailors better.

On the other hand he deplores the fact that clothes have lost the variety of traditional styles which existed before 1914 when morning coats, dress coats and dress overcoats were essential in a gentleman's wardrobe.

It was the individual nature of a garment which appealed to Mr. Guggenheim. But the factors which govern changes in general taste remain a mystery to him.

Customers and colleagues know Mr. Guggenheim simply as "Guggie". They popped in to shake hands and often accompanied their cheques with letters beginning "Dear friend Guggie".

This personal contact which is the heart of the bespoke trade kept Guggie busy in later years in an administrative capacity.

He was the longest-serving member of the British bespoke trade, indeed its Doyen. Mr. Guggenheim has been a great traveller all his life, and he has returned to his native Switzerland again and again. In the life of the Swiss community, too, he has taken an interest, and well do I remember him as an excellent dancer not so many years ago at the City Swiss Club Ball.

His many friends send him hearty congratulations and best wishes on this special occasion and they hope he will keep his sense of fun for many more years to come. (MM)
