the various installations of their sailing boat, accompanying them on a high-sea excursion near the West Coast of Scotland. This was followed by the showing of holiday slides supplied by Mr. R. Dhirt, Mr. H. P. Riesen and your reporter. It was evidently the best of what amateur photography can produce, the subjects being well-chosen and of good quality, showing us some lovely places in Scotland, the Bernese Oberland and the Dordogne-Country. Difficult, almost embarrassing to pick a winner between equals, a happy formula was found which allowed one to take possession of a bottle of a special Swiss wine.

Altogether a very pleasant social affair, we left, hoping that next year something similar may be organised and the experience gained this time put to good use.

Shortly after this event, the Swiss Rifle Club held its traditional Rifle Match against Manchester on the Altcar Ranges near Liverpool, the English team winning the match by 899 to 891 points. Highest score for the Swiss team was returned by Mr. P. Albisser with 80 points. After the shoot a hot supper was partaken by all attending and this completed for the rifle-men of both teams a most enjoyable day.

ANGLO-SWISS SOCIETY

The somewhat depleted ranks of the Anglo-Swiss Society who met at the Royal Commonwealth Society to listen to an example by Swiss Oceanographer Jacques Piccard on the defence of the marine environment had an exceptional evening. Mr. Piccard, son of the famous Swiss pioneer in deep-sea diving Auguste Piccard, made a most balanced exposé on the dangers and hopes for the future in respect of marine pollution. He called for world planning and restraint. The text of his half-hour exposé is printed at the beginning of this issue. It was followed by a film and a heated and controversial discussion with many in the audience defending very definite points of view. One lady engaged in a lengthy argument with the Speaker about his findings of the Meadows Report, which says that pollution confronted mankind with a grave peril.

Mr. Piccard showed a film of the underwater journey which he carried out aboard a bathyscope of his own design by drifting several thousand mile along the Gulf Stream. Mr. Piccard had shown the same film three years ago at the Royal Geographical Society. We had reported it in these columns.

The great majority of the audience was composed of guests of the Anglo-Swiss Society. These included leading oceanographers and environmental specialists from Cambridge, Oxford and London. They were generally fascinated by Mr. Piccard's exposé. The speaker was due to leave later for Dublin, where he held a similar conference.
