damaging her flute shortly before the concert.

The programme was most varied, beginning with church music by Hammerschmidt ("Herzlich lieb hab ich dich, Herr") and Staden's Cantate Domino Motette. Then followed De Fesch's Sonata in B flat major for flute and piano.

Michael Haydn's Kyrie gave the young singers much scope to show their skill, and it was performed most impressively. Two compositions by Mozart (Sub tuum praesidium and his Andante in C major for flute and piano) followed. Dvorak's "Trost" made great demands on the Choir, but they gave of their best living up to an enthusiastic and appreciative audience. Three songs, Werner's "Heidenröslein", Brahms' "In stiller Nacht" and Mendelssohn's "Maiglöckchen und die Blümelein" ended the first part of the concert.

The second half was devoted to Swiss composers. To a London audience, this meant hearing works rarely, if ever, performed in Britain, whilst to Swiss nationals present it also brought greetings from their homeland, tinged with a touch of nostalgia.

Bachofen's "Viele verachten die edele Musik" and three songs by Schoeck came first. The latter proved at times rather difficult for the young singers, but they sustained a reasonably high standard throughout. Mueller's "Four Miniatures for Piano" followed. Next came Klug's "Zuspruch" (1974), a small Cantata for choir and instruments.

The last part of the programme was given over to songs in Swiss, German, Italian, Romanch and French, and here the young voices sang with spirited abandon and joy.

On the whole it was a splendid evening, and the Choir and soloists, accompanists and conductor well deserved the eager applause the audience accorded them.

City Swiss Club

The cost of tickets to the City Swiss Club 109th Annual Dinner and Ball was inadvertently advertised as £6.00 in our last issue whereas it was in fact £6.50. We wish to apologize to the organisers and to those readers who were misled by that incorrect announcement.

Our next issue

Our next issue is scheduled to be the 4th Special Issue of 1974 to go out to all the resident Swiss of this country. As these issues take longer to produce because of the longer run, we shall be postponing our date of publication by one week. The next issue will thus be dated 29th November and reach its readers in early December. The following issue will be our double-Christmas issue and will be the only one published in December.
