'Time Island'

A decision which has been announced by the Government of the Federal German Republic is causing a headache in Berne and has come as a real shock to those officials who are responsible for determining the timetables of the Federal Railways. It is the decision to introduce Summer Time, i.e. to advance the clocks by one hour, as from 6th April, 1980. France and Italy have already acted on these lines in 1979 — and will do so again in 1980 — and it is considered more than likely that Switzerland's remaining neighbour, Austria, will follow suit.

Switzerland is thus becoming a "Time Island" inside Europe. The logical thing to do would be to introduce summer time as well — but this cannot be done, possibly for some years to come. The reason is that the electorate — the Sovereign, as those entitled to vote are called here — have rejected, as late as in May, 1978, a federal proposal for a "Time Law", which would have given the Federal Council the authority to introduce summer time as and when it thought it necessary. The resistance against this proposal — which was rejected by 53 per cent of the popular votes — came at the time from two sources. One were the peasants, who mounted a very lively campaign, and the other were liberal minded people who were — and are — in principle against giving the Federal Council more — or blanco — powers.

While it is true that Federal Councillor Chevallaz has tried to play down the issue of saying "Well, we shall have to advertise Switzerland by saying: this is the country where you can sleep an hour longer", it is also true that the makers of time tables, both for the Railways and the Airways, are very worried. The timetables for spring and summer 1980 for the Railways have already been agreed upon at an international timetable conference — and all the times and connections agreed upon have been based on the assumption that Federal Germany would stick to a former decision to abstain from introducing summer time.

Whether it is possible for the Federal Parliament to decide on emergency powers to be given to the Federal Council is very doubtful. At any rate, Mr. Chevallaz, in truly democratic fashion, has let it be known that in his opinion the Sovereign's verdict — rejecting the "Time Law" — would have to be respected. This meant that in his view the issue could not be raised again for several years.
