Switzerland is value for money once again

THE tide has really turned for British holidaymakers in Switzerland. Figures issued by the Federal Statistics Office in Berne show that what might at first have seemed to be a fluke surge of interest is a definite fact – Britons are now back in Switzerland in a big way.

They once formed the bulwark of the Swiss tourist industry, in fact it was the British, led by the pioneering Thomas Cook, who really put Switzerland on the tourist map.

Then, a few years ago, came the slump caused by the soaring cost of the Swiss franc against the pound plus the fact that other holiday spots were not only cheaper but could offer guaranteed sunshine. The number of British holidaymakers going to Switzerland dropped to a trickle.

Bowed but not beaten Swiss holiday interests have been fighting back. Local and regional tourist offices, hotels, transport undertakings have been hammering on the doors of British tour operators, persuading them that Switzerland offered genuine value for money.

Co-ordinating all their activities has been a man dedicated to making the British rediscover Switzerland, the head of the Swiss National Tourist Office in London, Albert Kunz.

And his efforts have paid off handsomely. The number of British visitors to Switzerland is now, in percentage over last year's figures, way above those from any other country.

The latest figures, for the month of April, show a 39 per cent increase. For the period January to April it is 42 per cent – compared to an average increase of overseas visitors of 12 per cent. The Swiss holidaying in their own country only managed to achieve a 2 per cent increase.

Not unnaturally, British tour operators are cashing in on the revived interest in Switzerland. This summer 114 of them are offering inclusive Swiss holidays to no fewer than 65 destinations.

Alpine festival returns

AFTER 13 years the traditional Swiss Costume and Alpine Festival will again be taking place at Interlaken on the weekend of September 5 and 6.

The Saturday programme includes a folk dance festival on the Hoeheweg, and a yodel concert in the Congress Centre Casino.

Sunday starts at 8am with Alpine wrestling, followed by a procession, the throwing of the Unspunnen Stone, and in the afternoon a festival performance of "The Voice of the Alps" on Unspunnen meadow.

From August 31 to September 4 the Kursaal at Interlaken will be the venue of various folklore events from other parts of Switzerland. From August 22 to September 13 there will be an exhibition on Swiss folk art of the present time. And the Museum for Tourism at Unterseen near Interlaken will be showing the history of the Swiss Costume and Alpine Festival until October. A brochure is available from the Swiss National Tourist Office in London.
