'The Grandisson Lady' of Exeter

HOW many people who annually enjoy the Grandisson service in Exeter Cathedral are aware of the history behind the occasion?

A lady born in Switzerland but now living in Whimble has made it her business to find out.

In the past few years she has become such an authority on the subject that she is often called "the Grandisson Lady".

Mrs Edith Grout moved to Devon in 1963 with her English husband to run the Gypsy Hill Hotel near Exeter and eventually moved to Whimble.

On her arrival in Devon she spent a great deal of time exploring Exeter and soon discovered that some of the place names in the city were identical to those she had left behind in Switzerland.

The Cathedral provided her with the connection she sought. For it was there she came upon the name of Bishop Grandisson, the seventh Bishop of Exeter whose family seat lay on the shores of Lake Neuchâtel in her homeland.

Sir Otho Grandisson spent much of his life in the English Court and took part in the eighth crusade, in which he saved the life of Edward I by sucking poison from an arrow wound.

Following his noble act, he became the king's adviser and confidante.

Sir Otho's nephew, John de

Grandisson, became the Bishop of Exeter, a post he held for 42 years, during which time he completed the building of the cathedral and built the church at Ottery St. Mary.

Mrs Grout provides the link between Grandson Castle, the family home of the Grandisson family until 1929, and Devon.

Her fascination that her new home should be so closely connected with her homeland led to two years research in the Cathedral library, where she was dubbed "the Grandisson Lady".

She wrote articles which were seen by the curator at Grandson Castle, who invited her to be the guest speaker at the launch of an appeal to save the castle from being bought by Arabs.

The appeal was launched with a cheque from Mrs Grout in 1980, and last August she heard that it was saved.

Since then, she has continued to give talks in East Devon and she has aroused so much local interest that she has been asked to organise a trip to Castle Grandson in 1985.
